Ontario is the Dominion's most industrialized Province and it is in her factories that recent labor activities have been concentrated. The most serious strike now in progress in Canada is the walkout of 500 furniture workers from mills in a dozen Ontario towns and cities. The manufacturers protest that sweatshop conditions in Quebec factories have made competition so difficult that they are economically incapable of paying the wages demanded by the strikers. The workers have refused to return to their lathes unless wages are raised to meet their demands. It is likely that another 500 men from the Toronto factories will join them in the walkout.

Canada's first sit-down strike of major proportions recently brought out the police and the threat of a bench warrant for the arrest of 50 men who have maintained a vigil in the foundry of a Sarnia, Ont., company holding a contract for the manufacture of automobile blocks.

In Welland, Ont., a textile workers' strike recently ended in victory for the strikers only after violence flared and a federal conciliator was called in to effect the settlement.

Up to Provinces

There is in Canada no governmental agency comparable to the National Labor Relations Board. Labor administration rests entirely with the provinces.

Ontario has plucked what the Hepburn administration believes to be some of the more attractive feathers from the fallen Blue Eagle and has framed the Industrial Standards Act which provides for a code in any industry where 60 per cent of the employers and employes signify their willingness to co-operate. The initiative in seeking a code must be taken by the industry and not by the Government.

Several industries are now codified and operate on schedules of wages and hours drawn up by the Ontario Department of Labor. The Ontario authorities are responsible for the administration of the code and are legally empowered to bring charges against employers or employes failing to comply with the regulations.

In the current session of the Ontario Legislature it was announced that Ontario would constitute a labor board, composed of five members, to hear complaints and to co-ordinate the enforcement of all labor legislation with special reference to the Standard Act. The Federal Government is powerless to act in a labor dispute unless both parties agree to the intervention.

Success in U. S.

The publicity given the recent strikes and the claims of victory made by the C. I. O. of John L. Lewis across the border and the fact that many major Canadian unions are technically within his fold have been added incentives to the drive to repair the weakened defenses of trade unionism in the Dominion.

Especially in Western Canada has the C. I. O. appealed to the more radical and more progressive minds. Labor has languished in recent years on the prairies. Winnipeg, once one of the strongest labor cities in Canada, has lost much of its dominance. Unsuccessful strikes and unemployment have weakened union organization in other western cities. But they are rising again and in their fight back to unity and strength it is probable that many of them will turn to John L. Lewis and his industrial unionism.

Labor is marching again. Even as strikes have mottled the industrial map of the United States it is almost certain that similar activity will continue to break out along the Canadian labor front with increasing frequency as labor flexes its muscles, realizes its new strength and prepares to demand what it considers to be a just share of the wealth that it helps to create.

British Launch Relief Plan In 'Special Areas'

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, March 2.—The British Government has awakened to the urgency of the need for measures to relieve what are known as "the special areas." These depressed districts, where old industries have passed out of existence leaving in their wake many unemployed living in want, are now said to have won official attention.

Much criticism, even from some of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin's strongest supporters, tempers the otherwise general approval accorded here to the Government's new interest in these special areas.

500,000 Affected

This awakening is represented by the announcement now made of additional loans, grants and taxation relief to help the half million men and women who have been reduced to direct and most demoralizing poverty owing to the complete and permanent closing down of large numbers of coal mines, shipbuilding yards and other industries in certain circumscribed but densely inhabited locations in South Wales, Durham, Lancashire, Sutherland and Southern Scotland.

The public outcry has for a long time been getting louder and louder against the failure which has admittedly occurred to remove what all political parties agree is a big blot upon Britain's otherwise fair record of general restoration of prosperity after the slump.

Opposition Plans Campaign

The Opposition parties count upon making a damaging attack upon the Government in the Parliamentary debates now about to begin on these new measures. Their view, which is also held by a group of Conservative members of Parliament variously estimated as numbering from 40 to 200, is that even now what is proposed is a mere "pill for an earthquake."

Thus the additional £2,000,000 which the Government proposes for immediate expenditure upon the endeavor to build up new industries in these stricken localities, is described as bearing no reasonable proportion to the £1,500,000,000 which Britain is to spend upon rearmament in the next five years. The Government's reply is that this £2,000,000 is only a part of much bigger commitments already entered into for helping these areas, where it claims also to be spending many millions on new armament works which will help in providing work for the men and women concerned. It also points to the fact that it has already in the past two years reduced this unemployment by 25 per cent.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

Japanese Combined Fleet At Tsingtao

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

TSINGTAO, March 30—The outer harbor of the port city was the scene of a brilliant pageant when the pick of the Japanese Navy, the First Fighting Squadron, escorting the flagship of the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Osami Nagano, the super-dreadnaught Mutsu, made port this morning on a goodwill visit here.

Braving the drizzling rain, local inhabitants crowded the vantage points along the coast since early this morning to greet the visiting fleet of the Japanese Navy. On behalf of the Japanese community here, Consul-General Masajiro Otaka, paid a visit to Admiral Nagano, Commander-in-Chief of the Japanese Combined Fleet, at his flagship. The Consul-General was also received in audience by H. I. H. Lieutenant-Commander Prince Asaakira Kuni aboard the warship.

Commander-in-Chief Admiral Nagano and his party landed here shortly after noon and paid a round of courtesy calls to local Japanese and Chinese authorities including the Japanese Consulate-General and the Municipal Government of Tsingtao.

During their visit here, the Japanese sailors are invited to elaborate performances arranged in honor at once by the Japanese community and the Chinese authorities.

The Harvest

A long wisp of artificial corn was the ornament on a girl's hat in the tramcar. It was placed horizontally, and it was tickling the face of a man who sat next to the wearer. Soon it came to rest in his ear.

The man took a huge clasp-knife from his pocket and began stropping it on the plam of his hand.

"Oh, what are you going to do?" cried the girl.

"If them oats gets in my ear again, miss," replied the victim, "there's going to be a harvest."—Tit-Bits.

Mrs. Alice Noda

FASHION EXPERT RETURNS TO TOKYO

"Honolulu women are more beauty conscious than a year ago when I was there, "says Mrs. Alice Noda of the Noda Beauty Salon, Ginza, who just returned from a three months trip to Honolulu, Hawaii. "Women of oriental ancestry as well as the American women are wearing the pompadour coiffure which embodies the upward sweep so fashionable now in Europe and the United States.

"Ornaments are still playing a major role in formal modes. Pins studded with brilliants, tiny decorated combs and novelty ornaments are equally popular. A formal hair style without an ornament lacks the necessary finishing touch," says Mrs. Noda.

Mrs. Noda will be glad to have her patrons feel free to consult her on their beauty problems at all times.

New arrivals at the Hotel New Osaka are Mr. L. Hambersmians, Mr. Allan Nordstrom, Mr. D. J. Handford, Mr. Yahachi Hattori, Mr. Yoshitaka Amamiya and Mr. D. Wetzger.

Gas Mask Output Startles Britain

is likely to be no short one.

"Meantime, we cannot stay our hands until we are satisfied that we have put this country in a safe position and in a position faithfully to carry out international obligations."

Mr. Chamberlain contrasted the record of Britain and the United States in an attempt to show that Britain was well able to borrow "on a far larger scale" than £400,000,000.

"In the United States during the last six years the national debt has been increased by a sum exceeding £3,000,000,000," said Mr. Chamberlain. "Nothing comparable to a burden of that kind has been imposed here."

The net income of Britain, he went on, has been estimated at £4,000,000,000 a year, and consequently the expenditure of £1,500,000,000 in five years "cannot be regarded as likely seriously to upset our economy.

"The borrowing is only a fraction of the £1,500,000,000, and as long as borrowing does not exceed the genuine savings of the country, there will be no inflation," he continued.

Aim at Dictators Shown

Mr. Chamberlain had little to say, however, of the foreign policy behind the permanent program and of the significance of Britain's huge expenditure in relation to the international situation. It was left to Sir Robert Horne, one of his predecessors at the Exchequer, to justify the defense program as the only possible way of dealing with the Italian and German dictators.

"How can one negotiate with a dictator who talks of peace as a result of a forest of bayonets—with a dictator who not merely preaches force as a necessity but as a philosophy and talks of war as a beneficent factor in human progress?" asked Sir Robert. "How can you argue with him when you are unarmed?

"How will you persuade to come into the League of Nations a great country with another dictator, who, since he has come into power has initiated a system of education in which all schoolbooks inculcate the theory of war and the necessity for preparedness?

"You can only exercise persuasion if you are in a position never to be intimated. We will be in a position, when these preparations are completed, to argue with much greater force in favor of peace than we have beem in recent years."

In these words the government's policy was stated more truthfully, perhaps, than in any of the recent speeches by Cabinet Ministers. The House appeared to agree by almost three to one, for the government's bill to borrow £400,000,000 passed its second reading by 307 to 132.

Defense Estimates

Passage of the bill enables the government to submit next week its defense estimates, which are expected to call for expenditures of at least £230,000,000 on the army, navy and air force. They will show once more that Britain is going ahead, regardless of cost, to make herself the most powerful fighting power on earth. And when the British bulldog gets his teeth into anything he does not usually let go.

British taxpayers had their first disagreeable foretaste today of what their government will cost them during the coming finamcial year. Estimates for the civil departments, including the Ministries of Health, Education, Labor and Agriculture, were submitted to the Commons, calling for a total expenditure of more than £494,000,000, compared with £448,000,000 a year ago.

A still sharper rise in expenditure will be demanded in the army, navy and air force estimates during the coming fortnight, so that, by the time the budget is submitted next April, the taxpayers should be prepared for the biggest burdens since the end of the World War.

Bills of £3,859,000 for air-raid precautions and £302,000 for the coronation are included in the Home Office estimates, while the expensive item of £15,000,000 is added to the Ministry of Transport figures because of the recent acquisition of main roads by the central government.

A symbol of changing emphasis in British foreign policy is a decrease from £271,500 to £144,500 in the British subscription to the League of Nations.

While today's estimates are the biggest of their kind for many years, they do not tell the full story. Last year's budget estimate of £448,000,000 was increased by £32,000,000 in the supplementary estimates in the course of the financial year. Similarly, new expenditures of the civil departments are certain to exceed £50,000,000 before the new financial year ends.

Roosevelt Discusses Political Philosophy

unfair trade practices could be eliminated with the objective not only of improving social conditions but also of averting future panics.

If newer and younger blood in the Federal courts does not result in decisions which accord with the views of the majority of the members of the legislative branch and the views of the President, he is then wholly willing to admit that a clarifying amendment to the Constitution will be necessary.

How Construe Washington?

In a time of public controversy, "so much," the President has said, "depends on what newspaper you read." Which is, another way of saying that one's mental approach to an argument often forecloses the effect of that argument on one's conclusion—an indisputable fact. The President takes as an example of mental approach and inflection the wide use made on Feb. 22 of extracts from Washington's Farewell Address against his Supreme Court program.

Suppose, he says, the reader begins his perusal with rememberance that Washington wrote the words in 1796 before the Supreme Court had attempted to override an act of Congress without the specific warrant of the Constitution. It is, then, in his opinion, wholly logical to read the warning words of the Father of His Country against usurpation as a criticism of the course the Supreme Court has followed in many decisions since it assumed the power of invalidating. Why, he asks, does not this passage more forcibly apply to the majority reasoning in the AAA or Guffey Act cases (denounced by minority members of the court itself) than to any act of the Executive since 1796:

"It is important, likewise, that the habit of thinking in a free country should inspire caution, in those entrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another," etc.

From the time he entered public life, the President has maintained as his goal the preservation of the American form of democracy. He thinks it still needs preserving, not from his forms or persuasions, but from those who have prospered most under it and returned least. He believes that his program stopped the descent of the capitalist system, threatened by enemies within and without. He wants to raise and firmly buttress it against the attacks of these enemies by the time he leaves office "on January 20, 1941."

The President's highest hope, according to his open meditations, is to leave democracy stronger than he found it and set an insurmountable barrier against the enroachments of other systems. In the long view of history he wants this to be his political epitaph. Mr. Roosevelt is sterile of self-pity, and therefore he never muses over assaults made on his predecessors which turned to praise when the record was engraved. He has noted them, as he notes contemporary attacks. But firm in his faith that democrats must often forge new tools to shore up democracy, he believes that judgment should be based, not on the tools, but on the solidity of the edifice when the work is done.

25 Capital Ships Forecast In Britain's

to £80,000,000, far less than the navy's, but fully as impressive when analyzed because they will provide funds to continue the process of making Britain supreme in the air.

Her first-line air strength today, including all planes attached to operating units at home, overseas and in the fleet air arm, totals 1,565 planes, according to the latest authentic information. This is, surprisingly enough, some 365 more first-line planes than Germany is credited with here and larger, it is contended, than any other European air fleet except the Russian.

The British problem is not one of either personnel or quality of planes and engines, but primarily one of puantity production. There have been delays in the past of seven years or more between the first specifications for a plane and the time the plane took its place in an operating squadron, but that is over now.

The exact production rate is a closely guarded secret, but it is recalled that Britain built more than 10,000 planes in the last year of the World War. Today the Bristol plant alone employs more than 8,000 persons, with the various Hawker plants employing probably 12,000 to 14,000 more.

Rate Being Speeded

Production, however, has barely started—in fact, has not started on certain of the best new types—and it is unlikely that all twelve factories that turn out planes and the three principal engine makers are producing today at a rate of more than 1,000 to 1,500 planes annually. The rate is being vastly speeded up, however. When it reaches its peak in the late Summer or Fall, some estimate, Britain will be building seventeen planes daily, and even conservative estimates place production at from 2,000 to 3,000 annually.

In any case, it seems certain that Britain will have at least 5,300 planes by 1939, and one estimate from a well-informed source indicates that, including training planes and reserves, she will have an armada of 8,000. The announced intention is to build up the metropolitan or home air force squadron to 1,750 by that time, with 450 planes overseas and at least 450 more with the fleet.

The percentage of reserves to be accumulated behind the first line squadrons is another closely guarded secret, but it is believed certain that Britain figures on 100 per cent reserves for all bombers and fighters, with some estimates of available bomber replacements ranging as high as 200 or 300 per cent. She is building planes at a ratio of two bombers to every fighter, but even so, experts believe that the plane wastage in the next war will be tremendous, and that the force with which the war is started will be wiped out within a month. Hence the importance of enormous reserves, which there is no doubt Britain is accumulating.

Air Force Faces Problems

The air force itself as well as the plane industry for the next year must face problems of expansion, with old squadrons constantly being broken up and new ones formed, pilots being trained and new planes being tested. Some planes in active operation today are obsolescent types, but most compare rather favorably with the planes of other nations, and the newest types, most of which are not yet in production, are believed to be superior in most characteristics to nearly anything in Europe. Some of these are here briefly described:

Supermarine Spitfire Single-Seater Fighter—This plane is described in official quarters as capable of breaking the land plane speed record. Elsewhere its speed is more conservatively estimated as a top of 346 miles an hour, probably the world's fastest military machine. Not in production. It is estimated the craft will have an hour and a quarter's endurance and be armed with eight machine guns firing through the propeller and faired into the wings.

Hawker Hurricane Single-Seater Fighter—This is to be in production within about a month. Two hours' endurance, 306-mile speed, a 30,000-foot ceiling and eight guns, each firing at a rate of 600 rounds a minute.

Bristol Blenheim Medium Bomber Middle-Wing Monoplane—Now coming into production, this machine is equipped with retractable landing gear and tail skid. Two guns, one fired from a revolving turret aft in the fuselage, the other faired into the port wing. Carries two 500-pound bombs in fuselage bomb compartments and smaller bombs in wing compartments under the flaps. Speed around 300 miles an hour. Range 1,000 miles. Cost $60,000 each.

Handley Page Harow Heavy Bomber—Speed 180 miles an hour. Range 2,000 miles. Coming into production.

Army Plans Less Elaborate

The British army step-child of the fighting services, has less grandovise expansion schemes than the others. Its primary problems are reorganization to fit a mechanized age of warfare and obtaining enough recruits to man its guns and machines. Many concessions, such as hot water in barracks and other comforts that will undoubtedly make "Colonel Blimp" roll over in his grave, will be included in the forthcoming estimates, but one thing that would make the whole service more attractive—increased pay—will not be included.

With some 121,000 officers and men at home and 89,000 others overseas, including India, the army today has about 250 light tanks, 260 medium ones, 6 heavy ones and about 200 other obsolete World War ones. The tanks are mostly old, but new ones are about ready for production and there is a light tank, that is a good, rugged vehicle, capable of about thirty-five miles an hour and armed with two machine-guns. The weakness is in medium and heavy tanks and there is much delay in production of an acceptable design.

The army is undergoing the slow, gradual process of being almost entirely re-equipped and changed over from the horse age to the machine age. The famous Scots Greys are one of the few line outfits left on horseback. The Bren machine gun with a rate of 1,000 rounds a minute and the Boys anti-tank gun have been added to the equipment. But the whole process of reorganization and re-equipment is slow and is delayed still further by the Cardwell system requiring battalions at home to train recruits and send them out to battalions overseas as replacements. Officers say it is almost impossible to form a cohesive, mobile mechanized force under these conditions.

Italy Sets Up Ministry For Fascist Chief

Christian Science Monitor

ROME.—The Fascist Revolution does not seem to have exhausted its impetus.

A further big step forward toward complete amalgamation of the Italian State with the Fascist Party has been decision of the Fascist Cabinet to confer the title and functions of Minister Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Fascist Party.

The present holder of this high office is Achille Starace. He is not a newcomer in the Fascist Council of Ministers. A couple of years ago he was authorized to attend the meetings of the Cabinet in his capacity of Secretary of the Fascist Party, without, however, taking an active part in its deliberations.

He now becomes a full-fledged Minister of the Crown, enjoying the same powers and privileges as the other Cabinet Ministers, while retaining in full the attributions conferred upon him by the Statute of the Fascist Party. He is a minister without portfolio. The Fascist Party, in fact, will not be transformed into a ministerial department, even though its head is a minister, but will continue its activities as formerly.

The innovation constitutes an interesting constitutional development which is bound to reflect upon the future relations between the Italian State and the Fascist Party. The elevation of the Secretary of the Fascist Party to the rank of Minister enhances the Fascist character of the Italian State.

The days have long passed when the party exercised control over the Government or dictated its policy to it. Both the state and the Fascist Party are under the firm hands of the Duce. Premier Mussolini is at the head of both organizations, but he is first and above all the Chief of the Government. True, he will not tolerate that the party which he has founded and which brought him to power be relegated to a secondary position in the life of the nation. At the same time, however, he considers his own party as subordinate to the state. In the first years of Fascism conflicts of authority were not infrequent between the representatives of the central Government and the leaders of the Fascist Party.

This was particularly so in the provinces, where often the secretary of the local section of the Fascist Party exercised real power, ignoring the existence of the prefects. This particular problem was satisfactorily settled by Premier Mussolini who clearly defined the duties of the governmental and party authorities.

Each now carries its duties in its own sphere. The Fascist party helps the Government in pursuing its policy. Indeed, it can even be stated that the party has become the most important instrument in the hands of the Government to execute its orders.

Two striking illustrations of the valuable aid given by the Fascist party to the government are the part played by the former during the eight-months' "economic siege" and the very effective way in which it is enforcing the government's measures for controlling prices.

Pacific Tie Hailed At Grave Of Perry

Hope for continued peace in the Pacific was expressed by representatives of the United States and Japanese Governments recently at a memorial service to George Washington and Commodore Matthew Calbraith Perry in St. Mark's Church in-the-Bouwerie, 234 East Eleventh Street, New York City. Eighteen relatives of Commodore Perry attended the services, says the New York Times.

Telegrams were received from President Roosevelt, Secretary of State Hull, Secretary of the Navy Swanson and the Japanese Ambassador, Hirosi Saito. The messages praised the memory of Commodore Perry and exchanged sentiments of peace between the two nations. The Rev. Dr. William Norman Guthrie, rector of the church, conducted the services.

A bronze plaque in honor of Perry was unveiled on the north wall of the church by a guard of honor representing the two nations. Later a wreath of lilies was placed on the vault stone in St. Mark's churchyard, where the American naval officer was buried on March 6, 1858.

Masutaro Inoue, Acting Consul General of Japan, in uniform, read the message from the Japanese Ambasador. The Japanese men and women sang their national anthem, which was followed by the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The President's Tribute

"Commodore Matthew Calbraith Perry was one of those rare figures in our history—a superior naval officer who combined a thorough knowledge of nautical science with an equal knowledge of the art of diplomacy," President Roosevelt wrote. "He was, therefore, just the man to perform the peculiar service he rendered to his country in establishing friendly relations between the United States and Japan.

"I am truly glad of this opportunity to associate myself with those who are to honor Perry's memory with exercises in St. Mark's Church in-the-Bouwerie where the great American sailor-diplomat takes his long rest."

Ambassador Saito declared in his message that "Japan was indeed fortunate in having this great sailor, diplomat and statesman open its age-old doors." He referred to Perry's prophecy that some day a great trade would arise between the two nations, and said this had come to pass as "we now see before our eyes roaring trade between our two countries, surpassed in the world only by trade between the United States and the British Empire."

"To the memory of this great man," the message continued, "it is altogether fitting that the two nations should offer their heartiest homage, and I am happy that a plaque in his honor is now to be set up in this temple to correspond with the monument at Kurihama, the historic landing point of Perry in Japan, which withstood that great earthquake as if to proclaim to the world the indestructibility of traditional friendship between Japan and the United States."

Unbroken Peace Hailed

A confident note of peace was struck by Stanley Kuhl Hornback, Secretary Hull's representative at the ceremony, who expressed the hope that "both countries will continue to contriute abundantly toward ever-increasing measures of national and international well-being, security and peace."

"The American people and the American Government have welcomed and encouraged every advance made by countries of the Far East in the direction of prosperity and progress, stability and peace," Mr. Hornback said. "Now we find that attitude given a new and definite enunciation by our Chief of State and by Secretary of State Hull.

"It is pleasant to reflect that the peace between Japan and the United States has never been broken and to be able to say that, desiring and intending to be good neighbors, the people and the government of the United States hope that the record thus established will never be impaired."

Rear Admiral Reuben Edwin Bakenhus, representing the United States Navy, pictured Perry as "a man of patience and force, with vision and a power of adaptability."

The tribute to George Washington was expressed in a program of song and responsive readings. Dr. Guthrie declared Washington did not need any eulogy and that no other figure in American history could compare with this one.

30 Pct. Of Accidents Due To Mistakes

a parking place, give the "left turn" signal, hand and arm extended horizontally.

Remember the Pedestrian

Once you are straightened out about traffic lanes and signals, Professor Neyhart teaches you the most important thing a driver has to learn about city traffic—the rights of pedestrians. If a pedestrian starts across the street when traffic signals are with him and the lights change while he is in the middle of the street, he still has the right of way. You must wait until he is safely out of your path. Again, if local laws permit you to make a right turn on a red (stop) light, as they do in many cities, the pedestrian who is moving crosswise with the green lights takes precedence over you. As you turn that corner on a red light, it is up to you to stop for the pedestrian; it is not up to him to get out of your way. This latter principle is especially often misunderstood by motorists, and disregard of it causes a frightful toll of deaths, lawsuits and prison sentences annually.

What are the worst mistakes made by drivers? To answer that question in the most effective fashion, Professor Neyhart points to the accident totals. In 1935, among the fatal accidents directly traceable to mistakes made by drivers, 31 per cent were caused by speeding—driving too fast for existing conditions. Professor Neyhart gives as the basic rule: Always be able to stop your car within the assured clear distance ahead. This is especially important at night, when you should take care not to outrun your headlights; that is, you should be able to stop within the area clearly illuminated by your lights.

Driving on the wrong side of the road caused 17 per cent of the fatal accidents. Neyhart emphasizes that you must always stay on the right, no matter what the temptation, and it is especially dangerous to get out of your proper lane when on a hill or rounding a curve.

Your Right of Way

Cars that did not have the right of way cause 15 per cent of the accidents. Here the basic rule is that if two cars reach an intersection at the same time, the car on the right has the right of way. Thus, if there is a car to your right, you yield to it, and if there is a car to your left, it yields to you. This does not hold true if the car on the left reaches the intersection ahead of you, or is already in the intersection when you get there. The other basic rule is that when you approach a highway where a boulevard stop is required, the going traffic on the main highway always has the right of way, even after you have made the required stop.

Cars that drove off the roadway—including the tragic victims that were forced off by other cars—caused 14 per cent of the deaths. A great many needless fatalities occur in this classification, due to panic when a driver finds himself off the roadway. As a prime article of training, Professor Neyhart deliberately makes his learners drive off the road, makes them run along on the shoulder for a mile or more to show that it can be done, and shows them how, by applying the brakes intermittently and gradually, it is easy to slow down and get back on the road with safety.

The remaining fatalities resulted from a variety of practices that already have been referred to, such as cutting into a traffic stream when there isn't room, passing on a curve or hill, failure to signal, passing on the wrong side and miscellaneous examples of reckless driving.

Professor Neyhart believes it is the human element that is causing the trouble, and he has an engineer's respect for the automobile itself. Statistics back up this judgment, for the figures show that less than four per cent of traffic accidents are due to failure of the car.

Something of the state of driver efficiency in America today may be judged from the fact that only about fifteen of the forty-eight states require road tests that amount to anything to obtain a driver's license. Even these require little more than that the applicant be able to manipulate the controls, with no real test whatever of his ability to handle a car in traffic. Meanwhile, accident tolls go steadily upward, and the most sinister fact of all is that the percentage of accidents due to driver's mistakes is constantly rising. In 1935, the last year for which complete figures are available, auto fatalities increased by around 300 over the year before, but deaths in which mistakes of drivers figured increased by nearly 1,500. Professor Neyhart's campaign is thus aimed directly at the heart of the problem.

Eclipse Expedition Will Go To Peru

F. Trubee Davison, president of the American Museum of Natural History, announced on March 7 that the Hayden Planetarium will send an expedition to Peru in co-operation with the Grace Line, to observe the solar eclipse predicted for June 8. The eclipse is expected to be one of the most spectacular in 1,200 years, and is to be observed from near Lima.

The Grace Line is planning an eclipse cruise for persons interested in making the trip, with lecture facilities on the scene of the eclipse, says the N.Y. Herald Tribune. Details of personnel and schedule in connection with the expedition are in the hands of Dr. Clyde Fisher, curator of the Hayden Planetarium.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

British Army Bill Highest Since 1922

N. Y. Times

LONDON, March 4.—Britain will spend more on her "contemptible little army" in the coming financial year than at any time since 1922, when normal military expenses were swollen by the costs of demobilization and the winding up of the World War.

Army estimates submitted to the House of Commons today call for a total expenditure of £82,174,000 in 1937-38—a sum of £26,293,000 more than the estimates of a year ago. Taxpayers will not have to bear the entire burden, however, for £19,054,000, or about one-quarter of the new expenditure, will be met by a loan under the government's plan to borrow £400,000,000 in the next five years.

The past year "has been one of ceaseless activity in every sphere of military policy," Alfred Duff Cooper, War Secretary, recalls in a memorandum accompanying the estimates. His statement indicates that mechanization of the army from top to bottom will be rushed with still greater energy in the coming year.

New Munition Plants Planned

Fourteen new munition factories will be built in various parts of the country, according to the estimates, and will cost almost £8,000,000. The total amount required for royal ordnance factories is £16,164,000, or more than three times the amount spent on them in the financial year just ending.

The army will need about 47,200 recruits in the coming year to maintain itself at full strength, Mr. Cooper discloses. He admits that recruiting is "below our hopes and our needs," but adds that "certain measures which I have in contemplation will, I trust, lead to substantial and progressive amelioration of the position."

The estimates provide for the improvement of barracks and other measures to make army life more pleasant, but they do not increase the pay of troops, which until now has been one of the greatest obstacles to recruiting.

Meanwhile late tonight Commons passed with almost record speed the £400,000,000 Defense La Bill, sending it to the House of Lords shortly before midnight. An earlier test forced by the Labor party on the motion to reject the bill introduced by C. G. Ammon gave the government a victory by a vote of 241 to 117. The bill then passed without division.

The opposition vote represented the almost full strength of the Labor party, which based its opposition on the basis that the government's proposals deal a blow to the League of Nations, that the cost of living would be raised and the way prepared for an eventual slump in trade.

Final debate was marked by the pledge by Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, that no more money will be expended on arms than is essential.

"If we can be safe, if we can be satisfied that we are safe," he said, "with a smaller scale of armaments we shall be delighted to reduce our program."

Moving the rejection of the bill, Mr. Ammon stated that industrial expansion as the result of the arms program would cause a boom, with the inevitable result of a rise in the cost of living and debt burden, and that a slump certainly would follow. Adding that this action is a blow to League principles, he said:

"Those who should hold the confidence of the country are using that confidence to bring on preparations for war, a war which was the very thing they pledged themselves to fight against."

Prior to the final vote Winston Churchill pledged his support of the measure in his first Commons speech on that subject in which he also taxed the government for being too laggard with its program.

As the latest move in its defense precautions, the government plans to recruit 300,000 "air raid wardens" to warn civilians of possible danger. The wardens will be distributed throughout the United Kingdom, with 80,000 serving in London.

Orders Sent Local Groups

Geoffrey Lloyd, Under-Secretary of the Home Office, said today that memoranda are being sent to all local authorities urging such organizations to cooperate with the police.

The plan follows the recent call for the organization of 200,000 volunteer fire fighters for service in a war emergency. The wardens, in pairs, will man posts, one station for each residential area of 500 persons, and quarter-mile sections in the business districts.

"It is intended that wardens should be in a position," Mr. Lloyd said, "to advise fellow-citizens on recommended precautions and be available to give immediate assistance dealing with air raids. The wardens probably also will be used to distribute civilian respirators.

OKAYA & COMPANY

LEADING DEALERS IN METALS

The Okaya & Company has a history of 368 years, Mr. Sosuke Okaya first starting the metal business at Nagoya in 1669. Since then the Okaya enterprise has been commonly known as Sasaya Sosuke or Sasaso. In the Tokugawa days, the establishment had already become nationally famous and a branch office was opened at Osaka in 1862. The Tokyo branch office was opened in 1872.

Mr. Junnosuke Okaya

Due to the expansion of business, the establishment was reorganized and made into a partnership company in 1909, and business connections were made with many foreign countries. Today the company's capital is ¥5,000,000, with a reserve fund of ¥1,600,000.

The Okaya & Company is agents for the Kokusan Kogyo Kaisha, Nippon Kokan Kaisha, Sumitomo Metal Industry Co., Mitsubishi Electric Company, Furukawa Electric Company, Hitachi Engineering Works, Nippon Iron Manufacturing Company, Osaka Steel Plate Company, Nippon Paint Company, Ikegai Iron Works, and more than forty other prominent manufacturers of the country. Also it is acting as agents for several important foreign firms.

The Okaya & Company supplies metals and metal wares to all Government offices and important corporations, and also exports to Manchoukuo, Philippines, Java, Siam, Burma, British India, Straits Settlements, Sumatra, Egypt, Belgium, Netherlands, Africa, Mexico, Central and South American countries.

Mr. Sosuke Okaya, present President of the company is the President of the Nagoya Chamber of Commerce and Industry, and also director of 16 important corporations and banks.

The Okaya & Company has its main office, machinery department, hardware department, iron and steel department, copper ware department, export department and warehouses at Nagoya. At Osaka, it has the iron and steel department, special steel department, foreign trade department, machinery department, and plating plant. At Tokyo the company has the iron and steel department, hardware department and warehouses. Branches are also opened at Dairen and Manchurian cities.

The company deals in iron and steel materials for building and bridge construction, ship building and vehicle manufacture: alloys and special steels for the manufacture of arms, airplanes and motor cars: iron plates and wires: copper, brass, aluminum and other metals: road-rollers, pumps, gasoline engines and other machinery and machine tools: boilers, kettles and other household metal wares: hardwares for building constrution: and other metal wares.

Mr. Junnosuke Okaya, younger brother of President Sosuke Okaya, recently left on a visit to America and Europe. Graduating from the Keio University in 1921, he entered the Mitsubishi Company, but in 1930 he left the Mitsubishi and became the vice-President of the company. He is to attend the Rotary conference in France, and also will visit other countries of Europe and America, before returning to Japan in October.

Deanna Durbin's Debut On Screen

Dainty Deanna Durbin, a brilliant and altogether charming personality will be introduced to local movie fans Thursday when Universal's gay comedy drama, "Three Smart Girls," stars its run at the Hibiya Gekijo. Deanna's voice has been heard previously on national radio broadcasts for many months.

Surrounded by a cast of established cinema favorites including Binnie Barnes, Alice Brady, Ray Milland and Charles Winninger, this youthful newcomer to the screen lives up to advance notices of her musical genuis.

She proves, too, that she is much more than just a singing child prodigy. Possessing exquisite beauty and rare charm, the talented youngster gives a smooth performance.

"Three Smart Girls" tells the amusing story of three daughters of a rich New Yorker who upset their father's May-December romance with a gold-digging blonde. The title roles are played by little Miss Durbin, Nan Grey and Barbara Read.

As the father, Charles Winninger essays a new type of role and turns in a grand performance. Miss Barnes plays the part of the gold-digger and Miss Brady is ideally cast as the blonde's scheming mother. Mischa Auer is a hit as an impoverished nobleman whom the three youngsters hire to lure the adventuress away from their giddy parent.

Ray Milland and John King provide handsome romantic interest as sweethearts of the two elder of the three girls. The remainder of the cast includes Ernest Cossart, Hobart Cavanaugh, Lucille Watson and Nella Walker.

Superbly mounted, brilliantly cast, deftly directed and expertly written, "Three Smart Girls" contains all the elements of splendid entertainment. Henry Koster, Hollywood's newest directorial importation from Europe, shows a deft, sure hand for comedy. The picture contains notable photography by Joseph Valentine.

Pacific Island Scene Of Eclipse Study In June

One of the largest and most completely-equipped expeditions ever organized to study a total eclipse of the sun will be sent by the National Geographic Society and the U. S. Navy to observe the unusual solar eclipse of next June 8, from a tiny coral atoll in the Phoenix Islands far out in the midst of the Pacific Ocean.

There are only two tiny islands from which satisfactory observations of the eclipse can be made, in the entire path of the eclipse, which extends for 5,000 miles across the Pacific Ocean. The expedition will use one of these two islands. The eclipse will be visible from the mainland of Peru about sunset, but the sun then will be too low in the sky to permit satisfactory observations.

Longest Eclipse

This will be the longest eclipse of the sun visible from the earth in 1,200 years, having a maximum duration of totality of 7 minutes and 4 seconds. This eclipse also will "end the day before it starts." Its path will cross the International Date Line in the mid-Pacific, so that it will begin on June 9, but end on June 8.

Participating with the National Geographic Society in the expedition will be the United States Navy, the National Bureau of Standards, and the astronomical observatories of several universities. Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations, has arranged for the Navy mine sweeper "Avocet" to transport the party from Honolulu to the Phoenix Islands early in May, and for the instruments to be sent to Honolulu on board the Navy's new cruiser "Quincy" via the Panama Canal.

Navy Scientists

The scientific program has been initiated and is being directed by Dr. Lyman J. Briggs, chairman of the Research Committee of the National Geographic Society. The scientific leader of the expedition will be Dr. S. A. Mitchell, director of Leander McCormick Observatory, University of Virginia. Captain J. F. Hellweg, superintendent of the U. S. Naval Observatory, will have charge of the Navy's participation. Other members of the group will include Dr. Paul A. McNally, director of Georgetown College Observatory; Dr. Heber D. Curtis, director of the University of Michigan Observatory; Dr. Floyd K. Richtmyer, of Cornell University; Dr. Irvine C. Gardner of the National Bureau of Standards; Mr. John W. Willis of the Naval Observatory, and a staff photographer from the National Geographic Society. A naval surgeon qualified to carry out the work of a naturalist probably will join the party at Hawaii.

This will be the third solar eclipse expedition in which the National Geographic Society has participated within a year. The Society sent two expeditions, led by Dr. Gardner and Dr. McNally, to the U. S. S. R. to observe the eclipse of June 19, 1936. This eclipse lasted two minutes and 30 seconds.

The expedition will establish itself on either Canton or Enderbury Island, both of which are in the Phoenix Islands, just south of the Equator, about 1,800 miles southwest of the Hawaiian Islands and 3,000 miles northeast of Australia. The party will choose one of the two islands, which are about 30 miles apart, after arriving in the locality and determining which island offers the best conditions for landing and establishing a camp.

British Islands

There are eight islands altogether in the Phoenix Group. They are all low, coral islands, surrounded by reefs, with no permanent inhabitants, and are under the protection of Great Britain.

Enderbury Island is about two and one-half miles long and one mile wide, while Canton is approximately 9 miles in length and four in width. Both have lagoons in the center, and extend not more than 30 feet above sea level. They are uninhabited. Landing on both islands is difficult.

Duration of the eclipse will be 4 minutes and 3 seconds on Enderbury Island and slightly less on Canton. The maximum duration, 7 minutes and 4 seconds, will occur at noon at a point in the open ocean about 1,500 miles from the nearest land.

The expedition's scientific program will be one of the most complete and comprehensive ever carried out by eclipse observers. Special attention will be devoted to observation of the sun's corona, visible only during a total eclipse, and the chromosphere, or outer layer of the sun, by photographing the "flash spectrum," which permits the determination of the heights to which vapors rise from the surface of the sun.

Dr. Mitchell will devote his attention to observing the flash spectrum, which becomes visible during a few seconds just after the moon's disk completely covers the sun, and immediately before the sun begins to emerge from behind the moon. Dr. Curtis will observe the spectrum of the sun's corona. Dr. McNally will photograph the corona with light of different colors by using various types of filters. Dr. Richtmyer will measure the total light of the corona.

Dr. Gardner will take with him the same eclipse camera of his own design which he took to Russia, which employs a new type of lens and with which he obtained very successful photographs of last June's eclipse. He also will make photographs in color. The Naval Observatory party will be especially interested in observing the exact times at which the eclipse begins and ends. This will serve as an important check on calculations of the movements of the heavenly bodies, which is the official function of the Naval Observatory and which aids it in perfecting knowledge of the motion of the moon and hence in predicting the time of future eclipses.

Blood Test Law Cuts Marriages In Connecticut

HARTFORD, Conn., March 13.—Dr. Stanley H. Osborn, State Health Commissioner, made public today a report showing that there had been fewer marriages since Connecticut passed a law January 1, 1936, requiring couples to take blood tests before they might be married. Many couples have gone to neighboring states for the ceremony.

Dr. Osborne refused to become concerned over the decrease in the number of marriages, says the New York Herald Tribune. He said the law would have a wholesome effect in the long run, and urged its enactment by other states.

In the first eleven months of 1936 there were 7,347 marriages, compared with 11,109 for the same period of 1935. New York State counties bordering Connecticut reported that 3,630 Connecticut couples had been married in the first nine months of the year, an increase of 1,274 over the same period in 1935. Many more were married in Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

Wants Long Test

"To decide the course of any legislation in its first year of operation is very difficult," Dr. Osborn said. "To declare abruptly that the Connecticut marriage law is driving people to other states is not in accordance with the facts. There have been 7,347 marriages, affecting 14,694 persons, all of whom are certain that neither is infected with syphilis, endangering the other. Any law which has such a widespread guarantee of freedom from the most dangerous of diseases not only should be continued in Connecticut but should be enacted in other states.

"Granting the operation of the law for five years, fully 50,000 marriages will have been performed with 100,000 persons known to be free from syphilis at the time of marriage.

"In this period of five years, at a very conservative estimate, 75,000 healthy children will be born. The number of still-births will decrease markedly."

Finds Physicians Approve

Dr. Osborn said that blood tests had proved practical.

"The medical profession is heartily in favor of them," he said. "The reason is that the confidential relationship between physician and patient or applicant has not been violated or strained. The individual health status of each person is still a matter of privacy, and known only to the physician and his patient, for the findings of each blood specimen submitted are reported directly to the physician, who uses this information in making his decision as to whether a person shall or shall not be judged suitable for marriage."

He estimated that 80 to 90 per cent of the persons found to have syphilis when they applied for blood tests had no previous knowledge of the infection."

The Things They Hate

Like most normal people they have their likes and dislikes but probably nowhere else could one find as strange a collection of pet hates as those of the film stars.

Call upon Edward G. Robinson to perform in the parlor or to give a characterization from one of his many pictures, and he'll go into one of the swellest imitations of "Little Caesar" you've ever seen, on or off the screen. He won't be acting, however; he'll be seriously mad, for he hates to be asked to entertain privately, and he has the same dislike for speech-making.

Another of Robinson's pet peeves is being called out of bed to answer a telephone call too early in the morning. Incidentally, he considers any time before nine o'clock too early.

Marion Davies dislikes bores, snobs, mosquitoes, income taxes, letter-writing and questionnaires. She, too, has an aversion for telephone calls, but unlike Robinson she hates them at any and all times.

Humphrey Bogart will discourse for hours at a time about any group of women with a "purpose" or a "mission," and his comment won't be audatory. "All such groups," he contends, "should be exterminated."

Nigel Bruce has an intense distaste for effeminate young men, and Claude Rains hates actors who never stop acting.

Leslie Howard doesn't like clothes. Not that he's in favor of nudism, but he believes in comfort and can't understand why so much time should be spent in matching ties, shirts and collars, and why some colors can't be worn with others. As a consequence, Mrs. Howard does most of the worrying about his wardrobe.

Kay Francis, one of the most photographed women on the screen, hates to pose for "stills" or portraits. One of the best dressed women in pictures, she dislikes fittings. Another of her pet peeves is interviews in any shape or form.

Robert Barratt, every inch a man's man, has no use for berets and baby talk, and Joan Blondell dislikes contract bridge, sand under her fingernails, gentlemanly mashers, ritzy people and parsnips.

Joe E. Brown's pet hates both have to do with motion. He hates to get out of bed, and he dislikes to walk up a long flight of stairs.

Herself one of the most democratic and "un-actressy" actresses on the screen, Bette Davis dislikes artificial people. She also detests a practice quite common in Hollywood—that of charging screen players "star prices" in stores, night clubs, restaurants and other places. As a consequence she seldom mingles in Hollywood's night life, and her sister does most of her buying.

Josephine Hutchison and Hugh Herbert both hate politics in any form; and Margaret Lindsay does a "slow burn" every time she hears or reads a rumor linking her name romantically with that of some man.

Al Jolson's pet peeve is Jolson imitators, but he also dislikes cold weather and cheerless hotel rooms. Glenda Farrell hates noisy people and ice-cream, while Jean Muir's pet hate is one possessed by many people of meticulous habits—cigarette ashes in coffee cups.

Anita Louise hates string beans; and Pat O'Brien, a "regular guy" if there ever was one, dislikes "stuffed shirts" and alibis.

Probably the most unique of all Hollywood's pet peeves, however, is Paul Muni's. The great character actor disapproves heartily of the "star system" in pictures.

Hollywood Influence On Feminine Fashions

York and Paris designers have of Hollywood. "They deny the influence with their mouths," she declared, "while their hands are busy copying the costumes worn by screen stars."

Nearly two years ago I designed a blue dress for Frances Dee to wear in a Hollywood film. I saw that identical design in the window of one of New York's biggest stores the other day. The only change was that it was done in black instead of blue. I mention this because I could not be mistaken about my own design. Other Hollywood stylists also could undoubtedly find their old designs being offered today as the latest styles by New York and Paris designers."

Judging from the Ride

The guide was conducting a touring party through the automobile plant. He stopped by the assembly line.

"Do you know what would happen if that man on the right side ever missed a day at work?" he asked the members of the party.

"No, what would happen?" spoke up one.

"Twenty-two hundred and sixty-one cars would go out of the factory without springs."

"Say, mister," said an interested onlooker, "that fellow's been off a lot, hasn't he?"

British Count On U.S. Cash To Fill Coronation Till

By SAM BREWER

Chicago Tribune

LONDON, March 16.—American visitors are listed as the probable heaviest contributors from a single nation to the pockets of Great Britain's tradesmen and hotelkeepers in revised estimates made by shipping companies today of the hosts expected here for the coronation celebrations.

Most of the money will pour in from the dominions and the United States. Little cash proportionately is expected from continental Europe, Russia or Asia, where currency restrictions bar travel.

100,000 Americans Expected

Shipping companies are estimating that with accommodations on every big liner leaving for Europe sold out until July, at least 100,000 Americans will visit England during the coronation period between May 1 and July 1. The coronation itself takes place on May 12.

It is estimated that 90,000 visitors will come to London from the British dominions and 5,000 from the British colonies. A scattering of visitors from other places is expected to swell the total number of visitors to around 210,000. These visitors are expected to drop about $90,000,000 in England.

This figure represents what actually goes into the pockets of traders. It does not include transportation expenditure.

It is believed that the average visitor from the dominions or colonies will spend $500 here, making the total estimated dominion contribution $45,000,000.

American visitors, it is figured, on the other hand may slip off to the continent sooner than visitors from the dominions and therefore may drop only around $375 per person, so that the total American donation will be $37,500,000 plus travel costs.

Few Irish Expected

No Spaniards and few Balkanites are likely to come to the coronation in numbers and very few Irish are likely to cross the Irish sea in view of President Eamon de Valera's attitude toward the British crown.

Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler permits Germans to take only ten marks ($4) out of the country, so that balks the German contingent. Premier Mussolini is not likely to encourage Italian travel to England and the Russians have not yet become a touring nation.

The French possibly will come to England in larger numbers than any other continental nationals. But they are thrifty and will not throw their money around like visitors from the United States and the dominions are expected to do.

Here's What Will Be Spent

Transportation and shipping agents have estimated the coronation rush and money contributions at something like the following table:

100,000 Americans at $375 per person, $37,500,000; 30,000 Canadians at $500 per person, $15,000,000; 25,000 Australians at $500 per person, $12,500,000; 15,000 Indians at $500 per person, $7,500,000; 10,000 South Africans at $500 per person, $5,000,000; 10,000 New Zealanders at $500 per person, $5,000,000; 1,000 Scandinavians at $500 per person, $500,000; 10,000 French at $250 per person, $2,500,000; 1,000 Greeks, Egyptians, and eastern and central Europeans at $500 per person, $500,000; 1,000 Dutch at $500 per person, $500,000; 2,000 Belgians at $250 per person, $500,000; and 5,000 colonials at $500 per person, $2,500,000; grand total, 210,000 visitors, $89,500,000.

The steamship passage bill for all empire visitors was estimated at $28,750,000 in addition to the above amount.

New Deal Seen For Britain By Mission To U.S.

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK, March 19.—Great Britain has found that the world is no longer content with living conditions of a decade ago and is now searching for ways and means to best meet the thought of the peoples who live under the flag upon which the sun never sets, according to Lord Phillimore, head of a parliamentary mission here to study conditions and new trends in the United States.

This mission is composed of five members, the fifth of whom—Alfred E. Wise—will arrive here on board the steamship Queen Mary of the Cunard White Star Line, on Monday. The four others besides Lord Phillimore are Kenneth de Courcy, deputy chairman; the Earl of Mansfield, Mackinnon Raikes and Herbert V. Alpin. These were guests of the English-Speaking Union at a dinner at the Plaza Hotel last night, with Judge Samuel Seabury presiding. A distinguished company, representative of the union, greeted them.

Lord Phillimore, making the chief address of the evening in reply to the welcome by Judge Seabury and Judge James W. Gerard, formerly United States Ambassador to Germany, indicated that British Conservatives, of whom he is a representative spokesman, were seeing the situation through new lenses and that what approached a "new deal" might be expected as the governing policy in the British Isles.

Fairer Sharing of Prosperity

"The mass of the people inevitably expect its share of prosperity," he declared. "It follows from this that the problem before the rulers has to be something in the nature of a general planned social amelioration of the people's lot, accompanied by a redistribution of wealth where the emergency seems to demand it.

"This is in striking contrast to the political philosophy of the last century with its attitude of laissez faire. Alongside this situation it would appear that the advance and material progress of the human race has almost outrun its discretion."

Lord Phillimore stressed the interest of British statesmanship in how the United States was trying to meet the problems of mass production and of agriculture.

Judge Seabury voiced the hope that the British visitors would find here what they were looking for. He referred facetiously to the mass of laws on the federal statute books and told Lord Phillimore he hoped the British mission would take some of them home when they return to England, indicating they could well be spared. He would not, however, guarantee their effectiveness.

Judge Gerard referred to the pleasure it gave him to act in behalf of British nationals in Germany, after the severance of diplomatic relations at the beginning of the World War in 1914—a work entrusted to him from the beginning of the conflict until the United States cast its power into the scales on the side of the Entente Allies. During the course of his address, he gave a short biographical sketch of each member of the British Mission.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

London's Air Net To Scare Bombers

principal capitals in case of war.

A balloon barrage, which is much like a submarine net, is suspended in the air instead of the sea and is formed by long lengths of wire hanging vertically from a wire cable which is held up by balloons anchored to the ground, says the New York Times. On a giant scale it is much like the dangling device above railroad tracks which warn brakemen of tunnels.

London Zones of Defense

London's barrage will form only one belt in six zones of defense against aerial attacks. Two outer zones consist of coastal reconnoissance squadrons in the air plus naval patrols on the narrow seas and the volunteer observers' corps scattered across the cliffs of the coastal regions of England. These are charged merely with discovering enemy raiders and warning London and its active defenders.

The third zone, consisting of rapid-firing three-inch or four-inch anti-aircraft guns and powerful searchlights, is known as the outer artillery zone. The fourth zone, known as the main fighter belt, will be patrolled by fighting squadrons of the Royal Air Force.

If enemy airplanes succeed in penetrating all these lines of defense they then will have the hazard of the spiderweb balloon barrage, which is the fifth defense zone. Even while dropping bombs on London they must chance the fire of the city's anti-aircraft guns, which are organized in the sixth defense belt known as the inner artillery zone.

The balloon barrage as now envisaged is thus but one item—and a relatively unimportant one—in the defense of the city against air raids. Its chief value is psychological and in London, where for frequent periods the location of the barrage will be completely hidden even in daytime by fog and low visibility, this factor is more important than it is elsewhere.

It was found in the last war that London's barrage was a real fear hazard to enemy pilots and forced them almost involuntarily to fly high, thus decreasing their bombing accuracy. No air planes are believed to have been destroyed by it.

One big German bomber flew through the barrage, broke off one of the wire cables and escaped. It was a wooden airplane with slow speed, so a barrage capable of damaging a modern metal plane traveling at 300 miles an hour will have to be much stronger.

Hope to Force Raiders Up

The authorities are not counting on the planes becoming enmeshed in the swaying cables like flies caught in a spiderweb. They hope only that the barrage will have the same psychological value that it had in the last war and will force enemy raiders to fly above the fog, where they can be found by the defending fighters, instead of flying in the fog, where they can bomb with impunity.

The London barrage will be mobile and the Paris plans call for the same general system. The balloons with their network of dangling steel can be moved from place to place to cover various sectors of the aerial approaches to cities. There is no thought of encircling all of London or Paris with such barrages because such a scheme would be too vast to be practical. The barrages will probably cover only a few miles, but because of their mobility enemy pilots will never know where they will be hanging.

The balloons to be used are an improved type capable, it is said, of rising to 30,000 feet with the vast weight of steel cables suspended. The French plans envisage using balloons in tandem, covering between the two 1,500 to 2,000 feet of airways.

APPLICATION TO THE INTERNATIONAL FAIR OF 1940

The Association of Exporters of Czechoslovakia has requested Mr. Antonin Raymond, Honorary Consul of Czechoslovakia in Tokyo that the association is planning to establish a Czechoslovakian Hall in the compound of the International Fair in Tokyo of 1940. Mr. Raymond is discussing the proposition made by the association with the officials of the Preparing Committee of the exhibition in Tokyo. According to the plan of the association, the Czechoslovakian Hall will be constructed true to the style of the country.

The association is a semi-governmental establishment and was organized some time ago. Cherry Blossom Time In Washington, D.C.

Caswell declared "carries with it a widespread readiness for change and a tendency to seek educational improvement."

In an appeal to the educators to wipe out war, United States Senator Josh Lee (D) of Oklahoma urged control of war preparations by a licensing system putting manufacture of munitions under government control, enactment of legislation to equalize the burdens of war through universal conscription of money and materials as well as men, and enactment of tax legislation which will comb the last vestige of profit from war. He advocated re-enactment of the neutrality law which expires this month, setting up a bank of the United States to levy money in war, and the establishment now in peace time of a board representing the military civilian and industrial needs of the nation with a complete plan for industrial mobilization, price-fixing, and determining priorities as to labor as well as materials.

Laboratory Plan

While the main sessions dealt with the needs of a social democracy a movement was quietly under way among a group of prominent educators who believe that the needs of an industrial democracy require the transformation of the secondary schools into laboratories where youth and adults may engage in active projects designed to give information on consumer problems, occupations and the use of leisure time for cultural pursuits.

A number of the presidents expect to go home to face their state legislatures with demands for appropriations to set up the laboratory plan. There are already 30,000 laboratories in Ohio and beginning with next September this industrial training will receive two credits out of the 16 required for graduation from secondary schools. New York State also is outstanding in experiments in the plan.

The movement marks tremendous change from the manual training of the past in which it was regarded as sufficient for the children to make a few little gifts for their parents. The laboratories attempt to give an interpretation of the present industrial world, coupled with practical experience in planning homes, interior decoration, lighting, heating, and sanitation and encouragemet to the graduates in setting up their own home workshops for leisure time crafts.

Favor Court Change

Thirty-one educators have drafted a statement to President Roosevelt declaring that they believe that the American people strongly approve his plan for reorganizing the Supreme Court and asking him to consider the addition of lay justices to make the body representative of corporate business, farming, labor, civil liberties, humanitarian interests, national and racial minorities, international relations, soical justice, culture and education, and scholarship in American history, government and economics.

The statement also advocates a constitutional amendment giving Congress ample power to legislate on all economic matters which must be dealt with on a national scale.

"Security" for Teachers

Frederick L. Redefer, executive secretary of the National Progressive Education Association, speaking at a section meeting, stated that he was working for petitions to Congress to include teachers in the provisions of the national Security Act, and advised hesitancy in endorsing the Harrison-Black bill for federal aid to education, "Because it does not adequately protect the financing of negro education in the South."

Mr. Redefer and Dean William F. Russel of Teachers' College, Columbia University, have been having an exchange of statements over the retirement this year of William H. Kilpatrick from Teachers' College. Mr. Redefer opened the subject by saying that many educators had communicated with him, deploring the termination of Dr. Kilpatrick's teaching services at the college.

Dean Russell, asked if Dr. Kilpatrick were being dismissed because he is classed as a radical, replied: "I don't think you can find a case of any violation of academy freedom in my administration at the college." Dr. Kilpatrick is being retired because he has reached the age of 65, said Dean Russell, adding that he regarded the agitation as a compliment to Dr. Kilpatrick. He remarked that if signers to a petition for his retention would each contribute $5, that $150,000 might be collected for a Kilpatrick professorship at the college. Mr. Redefer retorted that he would be glad to be active in such a move.

Dr. Kilpatrick's comment was brief. "I understand that I am retiring in accordance with an automatic rule of the board. Personally, if it were left to me I should continue teaching somewhat longer because I enjoy teaching very much and feel well and strong."

Recreational activities have more to do with the development of character and disposition than academic subjects, Dr. Thurman B. Rice of Indiana University told one of the sectional meetings. Dr. Rice said that if play is to do its part in preparing for adult problems it must teach the child not to be "a quitter, a cry-baby, cocky in victory or vindictive in defeat." It should be social, increasingly complicated with clearly defined rules, and teach the participant that joy is gained by the game, not merely by victory.

Not all the changes in the last six years in rural America have been losses, stated Edmund De S. Brunner of Teachers' College, Columbia University, at another sectional meeting. A survey of 140 carefully selected identical village-centered agricultural communities, Mr. Brunner said, show that the area of village service has increased or held its own during the depression, and friendly relations between villager and farmer have been cemented.

Canada's Mining Industry Breaks Records In 1936

Christian Science Monitor

TORONTO—One million dollars a day in new wealth was the golden stimulus which flowed from Canadian mines into the commercial life of the nation last year to provide the impetus for the remarkable advances that were made by all industry in the Dominion during 1936.

That Canada is far along the road back to prosperity is largely due to the unprecedented production and expansion in its mining fields.

Records Broken

In total wealth produced, dividends earned and distributed and men employed all records were smashed during a year of surging activity and optimism in the mining country, as properties were expanded and new fields developed.

The value of all minerals produced in Canada last year was approximately $335,000,000 as compared with $310,000,000 for 1935, an increase of about 8 per cent.

Gold output is estimated at $130,000,00 during the year just ended against $115,000,000 for 1935, a gain of about 13 per cent.

Better prices and rise in production figures raised the value of copper mined by almost $5,000,000 bringing the total to $37,000,000 for 1936.

A production record was set for nickel with 82,000 tons being mined, representing a value of approximately $43,000,000 against $35,345,000 the previous year.

More Lead Mined

Lead production totaled 185,000 tons, valued at $14,000,000, compared with 163,000 tons, or $10,620,000, for the previous year. Zinc production was 2000 tons ahead of the 160,000-ton figure of the year before.

While the quantity of silver mined in 1936, 18,500,000 ounces, was larger, it was of less value than the 16,624,000 ounces of 1935. The 1936 output was worth about $8,500,000.

The key position of the mining industry in the Canadian financial scheme is best indicated by the fact the per capita value for 1936 in the Dominion was greater than the 1935 figure in the United States.

From gold mining alone dividends last year were $80,000,000, representing a considerable gain over 1935.

Employment Rises

Employment in the whole industry rose and more than 80,000 men were given work in the mines. Wages steadily mounted with profits in the industry until mine workers, as a class, have become the best-paid labor in Canada.

The major gold-producing provinces with their per capita wealth were, last year: Ontario, $23; Quebec, $8; British Columbia, 21, and Manitoba, $8.50.

Wide Gain Seen In Treatment Of Cancer

well as the public, "cancer-minded by seriously considering apparently trivial symptoms and signs in their early stages and insisting that something be done as soon as the diagnosis of cancer is made."

He said that both the health of the patient and the "welfare of the practitioner" would benefit if the physician, after the case had been placed under treatment, followed it up with prompt reports to the co-operating surgeon or roentgenologist.

At its morning session the society's board heard a report on its Women's Field Army, of which the chief adviser is Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, dean of Stoneleigh College, at Rye, N. H. Mrs. Poole announced that the army would hold its first "enlistment drive" during the week of March 21 in thirty-nine states.

Women United in Campaign

"This cancer control campaign of ours," she said, "is, to the best of my knowledge, the first program in support of which all the major national women's organizations have united."

Pointers for the "army" to follow in its educational work were outlined by Dr. Clarence Cook Little, the society's managing director. He suggested "emphasis on the importance of complete annual physical examinations" for everyone; the "encouragement of more extensive and accurate records in following up cancer cases," creation of scholarships for scientific study, establishment of funds for lectures and formation of traveling and permanent educational exhibits.

Dr. R. H. Fike, of the Albert Steiner Clinic, Atlanta, also stressed the importance of periodical physical examinations in cancer control.

The society's executive committee elected the following directors to serve until 1940: Dr. Adair, Winthrop W. Aldrich, Mr. Brewer, Dr. E. W. Goodpasture, Vandebilt University School of Medicine, Nashville; Dr. Horsley, Dr. E. E. Irons, Chicago; Dr. Russell, Dr. George M. Smith, Waterbury, Conn.; Dr. William Crawford White, New York City, and Dr. Wilson. Dr. Herman C. Pitts, Providence, was elected to serve until 1939, taking the place of Dr. Samuel P. Harvey, of New Haven, who resigned because of illness, and Dr. W. B. Parsons to serve until 1938, to replace the late Dr. Robert B. Greenough, who at his death was president of the society.

Child Slavery

occurs.)

32. Marriage, including concubinage, would be a lawful purpose provided the girl had reached the age at which consummation of a marriage is not unlawful.

Registrations Proposals

33. The proposition that girls in need of special protection must be registered raises the question as to what girls need special protection.

34. Registration of adopted girls only may be dismissed as ineffective for the purpose of selecting the girls who need special protection.

35. Almost any girl of any race in Hongkong or Malaya may need special protection, but it can safely be assumed that only a very small minority does in fact need it.

(All girls transferred at an early age from their homes to strangers should be supervised. To me it is obvious that some kind of protective supervision should be provided for the mass of young children away from their own homes and who have been purchased (generally) by strangers.)

36. To employ registration to find the few who need protection would involve registration of many who do not.

(This appears to suggest that the scheme of registration in the proposed Female Child Protection Ordinance involves the registration of all transferred girls. This is not the case; only those under 12.)

37. The requirement of registration would have to extend, in the first instance, to all girls in Hongkong and Malaya parted from their parents, and, if it was widely ignored, as it probably would be, it would have to be further extended to all girls.

38. To be effective, registration would generally involve temporary or continuous domiciliary inspection. is administratively impracticable and politically objectionable.

(I can see no possible reason why a system of protection by registration of girl children removed from their parents is either "practically impossible" or "politically objectionable.")

Recommendations

Our main recommendation is that the policy laid down by the Secretary of State in 1929, and adopted in full by the Government of Hongkong, should be continued by that Government; and that the same policy should be given its full effect in Malaya, where up to the present it has only been partially adopted.

(This means inevitably that many years will pass before the Mui Tsai system is abolished. It involves little more than continued prosecutions in court, which is declared to be frequently "a long and tedious business." The widespread custom of transferring children provides a loophole for evading the law; the loophole will be very much reduced if not entirely removed by the passing of an Ordinance on the lines of the Female Child Protection Ordinance.)

Our specific proposals are as follows:—

Hongkong

1. The law should be amended to empower the Secretary for Chinese Affairs to require the custodian of a girl who in his opinion is in danger of being treated as a mui tsai to give security for her proper treatment. It should also empower the Secretary for Chinese Akairs to detain the girl in a place of refuge if she is in need of protection.

2. Where the Secretary for Chinese Affairs is empowered by law to demand security for a girl's proper treatment he should also be empowered by law to make the girl subject to inspection in her home by an officer of Government.

3. (a) The age limit in section 35 of the Protection of Women and Girls Ordinance, which provides for the removal of a girl under 16 to a place of refuge if she is being used or is being trained for immoral purposes or lives in or frequents a brothel, should be raised to 18, and the grounds of removal should be widened to correspond with those in section 15 of the Straits Settlements Ordinance No. 15 of 1930. (b) Either improper treatment of a girl or the girl's unwillingness to remain with her custodian should be sufficient grounds for the intervention of the Secretary for Chinese Affairs under section 32 (2) of the Hongkong Ordinance, and the subsection should be amended accordingly.

4. The employment of a female under 12 years of age as a domestic servant should be prohibited by law.

5. The six months' time limit for prosecutions for the offense of bringing an unregistered mui tsai into the colony should be removed.

6. Section 45A of the Offenses against the Person Ordinance, dealing with transfers for valuable consideration, should be amended (1) to remove the limitation which restricts its operation to minors and (2) to alter the method of expressing the exclusion of marriage and adoption from the scope of the section.

7. The Female Domestic Service Ordinance should be so amended that a registered mui tsai will cease to be a mui tsai in law and will have her name removed from the register on reaching the age of 18.

8. The guardianship of transferred girls vested in the Secretary for Chinese Affairs by section 32 of the Protection of Women and Girls Ordinance should continue until the girl is 21, the law being amended accordingly.

9. Every girl in respect of whom security is required should be periodically inspected in her home by an officer of Government, preferably a woman.

10. Every registered mui tsai should be visited at least three times in each half-year until she is 14 years of age and thereafter at least twice in each half-year.

11. The police should be given explicit orders to be on the look-out to detect unregistered mui tsai and should be given oral instruction on the subject from time to time.

12. Two inspectors or inspectresses of mui tsai should be employed exclusively on detection.

13. One of these should be employed to watch arrivals from China at the railway station and wharves.

14. Three additional inspectors or inspectresses of mui tsai should be appointed.

15. A woman Assistant Secretary for Chinese Affairs should be appointed.

16. Inclusion of women in the Po Leung Kuk Committee is suggested.

17. A separate building to be used as a place of refuge for ex-prostitutes should be provided as soon as possible.

18. The minimum statutory wages of a mui tsai should be paid to the Secretary for Chinese Affairs on her behalf.

19. Publicity in regard to the Government's insistence on the abolition of the Mui Tsai system should be promoted by the display of posters and the distribution of leaflets.

20. A philanthropic society or institution maintaining an effective employment bureau for women and girls might be given an appropriate grant from public funds at the discretion of the Secretary for Chinese Affairs.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

Open Arctic Part Of Soviet Defense

By PIERRE VITROUX

N. Y. Times

PARIS, March 13.—Across the frozen "roof of the world," from the White Sea to the Behring Strait, Soviet Russia has opened a path for her warships. In case of trouble in the Pacific, this new avenue of access to the Far East may prove of inestimable value to Moscow, preventing a repetition of the disaster visited upon Admiral Rodjestvensky's fleet when, after seven months of navigating around Europe, Africa and Asia, it was blasted off the sea at Tsushima by the Japanese squadrons of Admiral Togo in 1905.

The German-Japanese anti-Communist treaty, signed at Berlin on Nov. 25, 1936, is considered a direct threat against Moscow. Pinched between two great powers united by a common lack of outlets for surplus population, the U. S. S. R. feels herself menaced. What would happen to her security, what to her vast Siberian empire if Germans and Japanese coalesce against her in the future?

Concentrating on Siberia

For a good many years the problem of the strategical defense has worried the Soviet leaders, just as it worried the Czars. Imperial Russia had, during the last century, expanded toward the east, while at the same time she kept looking for a gateway to the open sea. Her Pacific establishment, badly jarred by the 1905 defeat, only holds together now through the port of Vladivostok.

The possession of this port is just as important for Soviet Russia as it was for Imperial Russia. To have to abandon Vladivostok, to be separated from the open sea, would mean for Moscow the loss of a lung. Cut off from the Pacific, compelled to withdraw within her shell, the U. S. S. R. would cease to be a great power. That is why the Moscow government has been giving so much attention to a long-range plan for populating the fastnesses of Siberia, and equipping them with land, air and sea defenses.

But these measures are not considered sufficient by the Soviets. Hence their efforts to open up the frozen Arctic seaway. Her southern shores bound by land-locked seas and her western shores dipping into the Baltic, where the German Navy reigns unchallenged, Russia has no other gateway to the open sea than Arkangelsk and Murmansk.

Canal Dug to White Sea

The first leg of this seaway has already been opened. A canal has been dug which connects the Baltic with the White Sea by way of Lakes Ladoga and Onega, thus putting Arkangelsk and Kronstadt within easy reach of each other.

The second step in the opening of the Arctic passage to the Pacific is the organization and equipment of the Europe-Asia route.

In 1878-79 the Swedish explorer Nordenskjold discovered the Northeast Passage. On his ship, the Vega, Nordenskjold left Gothenburg, and after twelve months and a half of effort he finally succeeded in reaching the Behring Strait.

Son of Rabbi

The son of a rabbi, he killed the man he believed had caused his arrest for selling narcotics.

Rose was at home with her mother, Ethel, when Joseph died. Both were overcome by news that the execution had taken place, and required ministration of a doctor. When Rose could speak, she was bitter.

"Gov. Horner is a murderer," she sobbed. "He has murdered an innocent man. God will repay him for this."

She accused Dent's mother, Anna, of lying in her testimony at Rappaport's trial.

"Why did they have to use the lie detector on Joseph after he had been in the death cell five times?" Rose cried. "Why didn't they use it on Anna Dent? She was the liar."

TO SPEAK AT GERMAN ASIATIC SOCIETY MEETING

Dr. Hans Eckardt will hold a lecture in German at the meeting of the German Asiatic Society (7 Hirakawa-cho 2-chome Kojimachi-ku) at 6 p.m. today.

Dr. Eckardt has made a special study of Japanese music of the Fujiwara period by making extensive research into the original Japanese literature on the subject, which has hardly ever been touched by foreign scholars. The lecture will be illustrated with lantern slides and gramophone records and will be followed by a demonstration of Gagaku, classical Japanese court music and dances, performed by artists of the Gagaku Society.

After the lecture dinner will be served in the dining room. Members and guests who wish to partake of dinner are requested to notify the secretary of the society by telephone Kudan (33) 2460.

Moore's New Triumph

Gloaming" and—guess!—"Minnie the Moocher," and you have Miss Moore literally running the well-known musical gamut. All are carried off delightfully.

Serving as Miss Moore's leading man in this film, is tall-dark-and-handsome Cary Grant. In the pleasing role of a two-fisted, hard-drinking American artist in Mexico, Grant gives his best portrayal to date. He serves the picture well.

But the surprise is yet to come. The film treats its audience to a story that would be welcome even without music. It is a deliciously cock-eyed yarn cooked up by that master of screen writers, Robert Riskin, who penned such comedy hits as "Mr. Deeds Goes To Town" and "It Happened One Night." With this film, too, Riskin makes his debut as a director, and he can well be proud.

In a nutshell, the story is that of a vain Australian opera star who is forced to leave America when her passport expires. As she has set her heart on singing at a song festival in the States on a certain date, she goes to Mexico with a scheme for re-entering the country. The plan doesn't work out, and as an alternative she marries a contemptuous young American artist, whom she pays $2,000 for the privilege. What happens after that—and, in fact, up to that time—is actually too funny for mere words. It must be seen.

Miss Moore's supporting cast is of the best. Such expert actors as Aline MacMahon, Henry Stephenson, Thomas Mitchell, Catharine Doucet, Luis Alberni, and Emma Dunn help keep things rolling merrily. There is little more to be said. It's Grace Moore at her best, in one of the gayest, most tuneful films ever made. In fact, it's perfect!

NY-Philadelphia Commuters Say They Enjoy Trip

By MARSHALL SPRAGUE

N. Y. Times

Members of the Seven O'Klockers Club, a group of 125 Philadelphians who commute 180 miles daily on the round trip to and from their New York offices, convened recently and reviewed the year's activities, which included covering 54,000 miles. The extent of this mileage suggests the question: Is the commuter a traveler?

By definition, he is, even though the loyal New York resident visualizes the commuter with pitying amusement as one known chiefly for his complaints against commutation rates and the dearth of escalators in railroad stations. According to Noah Webster, anybody who "makes a journey from place to place" is a traveler. The Seven O'Klockers, therefore, with an annual mileage in three States running well into five figures, deserve recognition on that ground.

The Seven O'Klockers are the most celebrated of long-range commuters, but they do not lead the field. Excluding undocumented Hartford and Springfield claims, the distance record appears to be held by a resident of East Hampton, L. I., who boards the Cannon Ball of the Long Island Railroad each morning at 7:02 o'clock and travels 102 miles through sixty towns before reaching Pennsylvania Station two and a half hours later.

From Other Far Points

One man used to commute from Montauk, fifteen miles beyond East Hampton, but he has moved to Patchogue, a mere fifty-five and a half miles from New York, because he wants to live near his business. Thirty-five people in all commute to New York from points on the other side of Patchogue, a town which the average New Yorker regards as rising romantically out of marsh grass and beach plum in the remote and storied East.

From Poughkeepsie in the north, six commuters cover seventy-three miles daily to New York. Commutation tickets are owned by fifty residents of Cold Spring, fifty-two miles from New York, and a total of forty commute from Brewster (fifty-two miles).

It takes the Seven O'Klockers less than two hours to journey ninety miles from Philadelphia to Liberty Street, New York. Two commuters from Port Pervis, N. J., eighty-eight miles away, must board their morning train at 6:25 a.m. in order to arrive at their desks in the city at 9:30 a.m. The train ride and ferry crossing alone require two hours and forty minutes. Commuters from Washington, N. J., (sixty-eight miles) also leave home for work at 6:25 a.m., reaching West Twenty-third Street at 8:47 a.m. The traveler from Point Pleasant begins his sixty-mile trip at 6:28 a.m., disembarking at West Twenty-third Street at 8:33 a.m.

Defends Commuting

The average New Yorker finds it difficult to believe that any of the benefits of travel are enjoyed by the Seven O'Klockers and tens of thousands like them who spend from two to five hours each day passing over familiar routes between familiar points. Let us see what an average commuter has to say:

"Maybe it sounds silly, but commuting does seem like traveling to me. I went down to Bermuda last month and that set me thinking. After all, isn't travel chiefly a state of mind to most people? Isn't it just a time when a fellow feels he cam relax and take a look at the world around him? Well, relaxation is exactly what I get out of my daily run down from North Jersey.

"A sort of enforced relaxation, if you get what I mean. The run takes eighty minutes; eighty minutes out of my life during which I'm prevented from concentrating on anything difficult. I can play cards with my friends, skim through the papers or read a light short story. Heavy reading is impossible. I can look out the window and enjoy contemplating nothing, knowing that my mood can't be interrupted until I reach West Twenty-third Street.

A 1937 Publication
Complete Course of
JAPANESE CONVERSATION GRAMMAR
By Mr. Oreste Vaccari and Mrs. Enko Vaccari

This new publication is the most comprehensive book for the study of Japanese ever published either here in Japan or abroad. Beginning with how to write the Japanese "kana" characters, the book is systematically arranged so as to enable the student to complete the standard of education of the Japanese.

A supplement to the grammar has been published containing Japanese onomatopoetic expressions, English idioms and English verbs followed by prepositions with corresponding idiomatic Japanese translation, an English-Japanese vocabulary, and the sixty translation exercises of the grammar printed in Roman letters and Chinese-Japanese characters with English version.

Studying Japanese with this Grammar Becomes a Real Pleasure

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE

Written by Count Ayské Kabayama, chairman of the Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai (The Society for International Cultural Relations of Tokyo).

"Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari have brought out what I would like to regard as the most complete book to date for the study of Japanese, and have, thereby, provided an effective and practical guide toward a basic study of the Japanese nation and people ....The method introduced by the authors is not only scientific, but human....the particular of the language, fully treated with practical examples, have been regulated in each lesson according to the measure of a partial effort of the mind....The Japanese taught in the book has struck me as of the best commonly accepted diction today....The authors have introduced a new system of giving all the sentences in the book in Japanese characters and Roman transliteration with their respective English translation, an innovation most likely to prove very helpful....Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari have published a book of high merit and may be regarded as the initiators of a new system for teaching Japanese.

EXTRACTS FROM PRESS COMMENTS

THE JAPAN TIMES & MAIL, February 17th. These two volumes are unquestionably the most complete and best books for the study of Japanese, and have filled the long felt need for such good books among foreigners....These books will become the standard medium by which Japanese language can be mastered.

THE JAPAN ADVERTISER, February 17th. These two volumes represent a tremendous effort....Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari's book should be of great benefit to those foreigners who desire to master Japanese.

THE TOKYO NICHI NICHI, February 14th. The books recently published by Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari can be recommended as the best ones to date for the study of Japanese.

Normandie Makes Atlantic Record

N. Y. Times

PARIS, March 22.—The French liner Normandie recaptured the record for the fastest eastward Atlantic crossing from the British Queen Mary, it was announced tonight.

The record speed, made in spite of the headwinds and storms usual at this season, was a 30.39-knot average for the crossing from Ambrose Light to Bishop's Rock. The elapsed time was 4 days 6 minutes 23 seconds for 2,967 miles.

The Queen Mary's best mark for the eastward voyage is 30.63 knots and for the west-bound trip 30.14 knots. It is pointed out that the Normandie during the present run from New York also established a new mark for the highest daily average—728 sea miles for the 24 hours from Friday noon at an average speed of 31.65 knots, against the Queen Mary's best daily average of 713 miles at 31 knots.

News of the Normandie's feat reached the Paris office of the French Line this evening by radio from Captain Pierre Thoreux after the liner had passed Bishop's Back.

New Propellers Credited

Credit for the Normandie's achievement is given to the set of four new propellers installed a few weeks ago. They are different from the old ones in that they are four-bladed instead of three-bladed and their carrying surface is increased by a different design, augmenting the pitch. This, combined with the ship's streamlining, enabled it to better the Atlantic record despite engines developing "only" 160,000 horsepower, which is 40,000 less than the Queen Mary's.

The Normandie's log since leaving New York on Thursday tells a graphic story of the vessel's fight against time. On the first day out the Normandie covered 656 miles at an average speed of 31.67 knots. On the second day she made the daily-run record. On the third day she made 707 miles at an average speed of 30.74 knots. Her fourth day's average is estimated to be between 30.65 and 30.70 knots.

The ship's "day" is twenty-three hours on the eastward crossing, allowing a loss of five hours, which is the difference between New York and Greenwhich time.

Rejoicing in Paris

The Normandie's performance created much rejoicing here tonight, and the eagerly bought evening newspapers announced the record under banner headlines such as "Normandie Has Recaptured Blue Ribbon From Queen Mary."

Although maritime circles look on the record from the point of view of added prestige for the French merchant marine, the man in the street seems to understand what the achievement can mean as a business aid for the Paris Exposition this Summer. The record seemed tonight to monopolize the conversation in restaurants, buses and subways, even to the exclusion of political talk.

The Normandie, which is calling at Southampton, is expected to dock at Havre at 11 A. M. tomorrow. It is probable that a welcoming committee of the municipality of Havre and a delegation from the Ministry of Merchant Marine will board the vessel to extend official congratulations to Captain Thoreux.

India Issue Again Troubles Britain

By FERDINAND KUHN JR.

N. Y. Times

LONDON, March 29—At the moment when Britain is engrossed in rearmament and is grappling with dangerous international problems in Europe her imperial policy has just suffered in far away India what may be a setback of the first magnitude.

Refusal of the All-India Congress party to accept office in six Indian provinces, is regarded here with the utmost seriousness. It has revived the whole question of Indian constitutional progress and has faced Britain once more with the possibility of a political upheaval among her 350,000,000 subjects in the East.

Until a few days ago it has been thought that all danger had been averted by the creation of a federal Constitution granting to India a strictly limited amount of self-government. By yielding the appearance of power while keeping the substance of her control Britain seemed to have won the race with revolution, which ever since the World War has been the mainspring of her Indian policy.

Possibility of Trouble Opened

But now, unless some miracle of persuasion occurs, officials here fear that their efforts of the past ten years may be wasted and that their hopes of a peaceful, contented India will be shattered. The sudden political deadlock in six of the eleven great Indian provinces has opened once more the ugly possibility of civil disobedience and has revived memories of 1929 and 1930, when more than 60,000 Indians had to be sent to jails or concentration camps for political offenses.

Today the Congress leaders in Bishar and the United Provinces decided against the acceptance of office, thus bringing themselves into line with the other four provinces in which the Congress won sweeping majorities at the recent elections and in which the Congress leaders have refused to form ministries under the new Constitution.

In all the six Provinces the British are trying to form makeshift Cabinets with the help of minority leaders, but whoever accepts the responsibility of office is bound to be thrown out by the Congress majorities as soon as new Legislatures assemble.

The possibility of an escape from the deadlock is vanishing, for neither the Congress leaders, on the one hand, nor the British Governors, on the other, can back down. For the Congress to change its mind would be a surrender; for the Governors to yield any of their veto rights would be an abdication of their powers at the very moment when the new Constitution with its bristling "safeguards" is due to be launched.

No imperial event for years has come as such a shock to the British Government as this unheralded defiance by the Congress leaders. It has caught officials here and in India unprepared and uncertain of their next moves.

In Britain it has brought a chorus of "I told you so" from a large section of the Conservative party that fought the proposed Constitution tooth and nail a few years ago. It has produced at the same time a sense of resentment and betrayal among those who pushed the new Constitution through Parliament in the hope and belief that the Congress leaders would help work it.

Part of this resentment springs from the almost incredible effort that went into the new Indian Constitution from the time the Simon Commission returned from India in 1928. No government ever gave so much time and thought to a single problem as Britain gave to India during the three round-table conferences, the sittings of the joint select committee of Parliament and the interminable debates in the House of Commons that preceded passage of the India Bill in its final form. The controversy shook the Conservative party to its foundations; Stanley Baldwin staked his political future upon pushing the new Constitution through.

Charter in Effect Thursday

If all this were to be thrown away one could understand London's dismay tonight, but the causes go much deeper. For the British Government believed when the India Bill was passed that the political future of India was settled for some years at least. The new Constitution is due to go into effect in the provinces on April 1—next Thursday. The Indian civil service has been made ready for the change and vast administrative machinery has been created to carry on the new federal structure.

Cabinet Ministers here knew there would be many hitches and many emergencies in the early workings of the new Constitution, but they feel confident any difficulties could be handled by "men on the spot" without distracting attention in London.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

Possibilities Of Gas

developed a similar one called diphenylaminechlorarsine (Adamsite), but never got it into action. These irritants are not stopped by any canister chemicals and an extremely efficient filter, which makes for hard breathing, is necessary.

Vesicants are blister-producers. Mustard gas, which is really an oily liquid, was called "the king of battle gases" although it was seldom fatal unless its vapor was inhaled. Masks were of little use, since mustard gas penetrated ordinary clothing and shoes easily, raising huge red welts which sometimes ulcerated and always laid the soldier low for a month or more. When splashed around by shells it contaminates everything it touches for days. It is therefore more valuable for defense than offense, since it is impracticable for attackers to move forward through a mustard-shelled area. Mustard was not introduced until 1917 and comprised less than 10 per cent of the total gas shells fired in the War. Yet it accounted for 400,000 casualties, which was one-third of the total gas casualties. It took only 60 lb. of mustard to produce one causalty, as against 230 lb. of lung injurants and 500 lb. of high explosive.

Mustard was far and away the most important vesicant in the European arena. In 1918, however, the U. S. was manufacturing a powerful blister-liquid called Lewisite, none of which reached the front. Because of its arsenic content, Lewisite may poison the blisters it produces. Author Prentiss declares that 30 drops of Lewisite splashed on a man's skin would be fatal. It is more volatile and less persistent than mustard gas, however, and if no arsenic poison sets in, its wounds heal more quickly. Author Prentiss believes that under favorable conditions Lewisite would prove superior to mustard. British experts disagree with him. Lewisite is certain to get a thorough tryout in any future war betwen major powers.

Cities Gassed?

In 1931 Biographer Emil Ludwig published in the Satevepost a scarehead article in which he stated: "Twelve big bombs of Lewisite gas dropped on Berlin or Chicago would be enough to destroy all life in those cities." Chemical officers jumped on this statement as utter nonsense. Author Prentiss points out that to lay down any sort of effective (not lethal) contamination it would be necessary to deposit 10 lb. of vesicant liquid on every 100 sq. yd.

Chemical officers will admit—or even argue—that it is conceivable that some foreign power or combination of powers might drive the U. S. Navy to cover, bring up their aircraft carriers to 50 or 100 miles from the coast, attack New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, St. Louis by air. Lieut.-Col. Prentiss holds that, if such a fantastic possibility materialized, incendiary bombs and high explosives would be more harmful than gas. To be effective, gas requires masses of human beings at ground level and without adequate shelter. War gas is heavy. Even if the enemy had the tremendous number of planes and material to blanket one square mile of Manhattan, the inhabitants would need only to seek upper stories of houses and buildings close their windows and wait for masked degassing squads to clean up.

A 1937 Publication
Complete Course of
JAPANESE CONVERSATION GRAMMAR
By Mr. Oreste Vaccari and Mrs. Enko Vaccari

This new publication is the most comprehensive book for the study of Japanese ever published either here in Japan or abroad. Beginning with how to write the Japanese "kana" characters, the book is systematically arranged so as to enable the student to complete the standard of education of the Japanese.

A supplement to the grammar has been published containing Japanese onomatopoetic expressions, English idioms and English verbs followed by prepositions with corresponding idiomatic Japanese translation, an English-Japanese vocabulary, and the sixty translation exercises of the grammar printed in Roman letters and Chinese-Japanese characters with English version.

Studying Japanese with this Grammar Becomes a Real Pleasure

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE

Written by Count Ayské Kabayama, chairman of the Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai (The Society for International Cultural Relations of Tokyo).

"Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari have brought out what I would like to regard as the most complete book to date for the study of Japanese, and have, thereby, provided an effective and practical guide toward a basic study of the Japanese nation and people ....The method introduced by the authors is not only scientific, but human....the particular of the language, fully treated with practical examples, have been regulated in each lesson according to the measure of a partial effort of the mind....The Japanese taught in the book has struck me as of the best commonly accepted diction today....The authors have introduced a new system of giving all the sentences in the book in Japanese characters and Roman transliteration with their respective English translation, an innovation most likely to prove very helpful....Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari have published a book of high merit and may be regarded as the initiators of a new system for teaching Japanese.

EXTRACTS FROM PRESS COMMENTS

THE JAPAN TIMES & MAIL, February 17th. These two volumes are unquestionably the most complete and best books for the study of Japanese, and have filled the long felt need for such good books among foreigners....These books will become the standard medium by which Japanese language can be mastered.

THE JAPAN ADVERTISER, February 17th. These two volumes represent a tremendous effort....Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari's book should be of great benefit to those foreigners who desire to master Japanese.

THE TOKYO NICHI NICHI, February 14th. The books recently published by Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari can be recommended as the best ones to date for the study of Japanese.

Increased Trade With Russia Seen

Pointing to the regrowth of Russian-American trade, Alexander A. Troyanovsky, Soviet Ambassador to the United States, declared on March 20 at New York City that a very strong foundation for further development had been created. He predicted that "our trade relations will take a position better for both sides."

"I am convinced that there are many possibilities for further development of our trade relations," he said, "and a very strong foundation for further development has already been created."

Mr. Troyanovsky spoke at a luncheon of the American-Russian Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Commodore, held in honor of Ivan Y. Boyeff, retiring chairman of the board and president of the Amtorg Trading Corporation, says the New York Times.

Reeve Schley, president of the chamber, who presided at the luncheon, said in his annual report that 325 new American companies had entered the field of Russian trade in 1936. In all, he said, 1,023 American companies sold their products to the Amtorg Corporation last year. Of these fifty-eight received orders exceeding $100,000.

"During the calendar year of 1936," Mr. Schley said, "the Soviet Union made $32,000,000 worth of purchases in the United States. This included a few million dollars worth of cotton. During the treaty period from July 1, 1935, to July 1, 1936, the Soviet Union brought $38,000,000 of American goods, thereby exceeding the treaty agreement requirement of $30,000,000 by $8,000,000.

"The agreement was renewed late in June, 1936, and the purchasing since that renewal, that is from July 1, 1936, to March 1, 1937, amounted to about $25,000,000. Inasmuch as there yet remain four months before the end of the period covered by the agreement, we can safely assume that this year's purchases will again substantially exceed the sum of $30,000,000 set when the agreement was renewed."

The trade agreement between the United States and Russia has "worked out satisfactorily," Mr. Rosoff said, adding that, although the imports of Soviet products into the United States had shown some gain, they were "not corresponding to the possibilities in this direction."

The turnover in trade between the United States and Russia has increased two and a half times from 1932 to 1936, he said, an amount "that is still relatively modest." He remarked that "it is evident that a healthy development of trade must be on a basis of mutual advantage."

Mr. Boyeff said the United States was a very interesting place, from which he had learned a great deal, but about which he would not write a book. He thanked the chamber for its "warm and friendly attitude" and for its aid in extending Russian-American trade. He said he was convinced that commerce between the two countries would continue to develop.

At the annual meeting before the luncheon a new board of directors of the chamber was elected, while the present cabinet of officers was returned to office. They include, besides Mr. Schley: William C. Dickerman, vice president; Whitney N. Seymour, secretary-treasurer; John C. Klein, assistant treasurer, and Louis E. Browne, executive secretary.

Plan Block Signal For Safety In Air

By LAUREN D. LYMAN

N. Y. Times

WASHINGTON, March 24—A radio block signal system for the airlines of the country, which will inform the pilot of his exact position in any sort of weather, is being planned by a committee of technical experts of the Bureau of Air Commerce.

Recent developments in the practical application of the ultra-high frequency radio bands, it was stated today, are the basis for one of the most radical programs for airway beacons yet undertaken by the government. The engineers and research workers charged with the development are cautious in their statements, yet laboratory experiments indicate that their plan is practical.

Experimental engineers employed by some of the big broadcasting companies on television and by the government have learned that for short distances radio frequencies above 40 megacycles, or 40,000 kilocycles, have certain characteristics which are not possessed by the frequencies used for ordinary broadcasting and commercial sending and receiving.

Their signals can be controlled easily and they will go through weather and other conditions where static is present, which interfere seriously with the bands now in use. Moreover they require a very small power output.

These factors are important in connection with their use in aviation. The plan for which the government engineers have great hope consists of the erection of a series of radio "fans" or curtains, along the airways, each sending out a distinctive signal both visual and audible.

In Experimental Use Now

These "fans," one of which is now in experimental use at Bowie, Md., on the New York-Washington airway, are created by sending out a directional radio signal from two to three miles in the air and with a spread of about ten miles.

It is planned to use them first as warning signals outside of busy airports like Newark, Cleveland and Chicago, where planes land and take off at the rate of 100 or more a day.

A pilot approaching Newark on a stormy day when visibility is virtually "zero," and listening to the regular signals of the radio beam, would suddenly find the steady monotonous message of the beam interrupted by a sharper sound. At the same time a red light would flash on his instrument board.

He would know that he was over New Brunswick, about thirty air miles from the airport. Less than ten minutes later another sound, on a different key, would come in through his receivers and inform him that he was over Elizabeth, not more than five miles from the airport.

But the engineers are not limiting their program to the development of safe approaches to terminals. They see in the device a sure way of warning fliers, storm beset, of their approach to obstacles, high mountain peaks and ridges. Such a device, set up above the Newhall Pass outside of Los Angeles where two planes crashed in December and January, might have warned the pilots that they were too close to the ground for safety.

Device Has Low Power Cost

One of the features of the device is its low power cost. A "fan" of the type described would take about the power used in operating an ordinary reading lamp. Automatic power plants where power lines are not available could be used at little expense to keep the "fans" working on a twenty-four-hour schedule.

One obstacle, outside of the power of engineering genius to overcome, remains. The ultra-high frequency bands available for practical use are limited. Already the Federal Communications Commission, charged with allocating these bands, has on hand more applications for licenses to use them than there are bands to grant.

Broadcasting companies want them for television. Police Departments want them for use in cities. Both the army and the navy want them for military use, and the Bureau of Air Commerce wants them to make the airways safer.

However, the engineers of the Bureau of Air Commerce have been assured that the safety of air transport will be considered before the demands of television, and so the experiments are being started.

When the device will be ready for practical use no one was prepared to say today. However, enough "paper work" and experiment have been done to indicate that some of the "fans" will be in use on the airlines within a year.

philosophy shape the lives of the other characters.

As the surgeon who bungles the operation and causes Flynn's martyrdom, but subsequently redeems himself, Henry O'Neill gives one of his always thoughtful and appealing performances. And the same phrase might be fitted to the work of Walter Abel as a fellow-scientist of Flynn's, who works with him at the mountain laboratory. Spring Byington gives one of her most convincing performances as Mrs. Dexter who is one of the Dean's most trusting followers.

"Green Light" has been produced with the usual great care and lavishness that marks a Cosmopolitan picture released by First National, and it was directed with the artistic skill always shown by Frank Borzage, the famous maker of "Seventh Heaven," "Bad Girl," "Little Man, What Now," "Flirtation Walk" and "Hearts Divided."

The novel has been followed closely in the screen play written by Milton Krims.

A combination of great story and great cast is one that is bound to tell—and that's what "Green Light" has.

Murchison Looks To Textile Reform

N. Y. Times

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., March 29.—Dr. Claudius T. Murchison, president of the Cotton Textile Institute, answered today the challenge of the Committee for Industrial Organization to the textile industry when he addressed a large audience at the University of North Carolina.

"We will not organize against the C. I. O. threat," he said, "but we will concentrate action with respect to improved wages, shorter working hours, elimination of child labor, establishment of a code of fair trade practices, all of which look to the greater stability of the industry and a return to prosperity."

Dr. Murchison addressed both morning and afternoon sessions of the Human Relations Insitute.

Dr. E. W. Zimmerman, University of North Carolina economist, gave an analysis of economic internationalism at tonight's session.

Dr. Murchison, who was introduced by Dean D. D. Carroll of the School of Commerce, said that the textile industry wanted a hand in the solution of the problems which now face it.

"It has attempted to organize the cotton mill executives so as to impose on each a legal obligation to observe certain standards of hours and wages," he continued. "But such a procedure is violation of the anti-trust laws, and it is unlawful for industries to agree voluntarily among themselves upon a similar program of action, no matter how constructive it may be.

"The whole question of wages, hours, working conditions and collective bargaining must be brought within the jurisdiction of a single agency and a single mind if industrial warfare is to be stopped."

Discussing the Japanese-American textile agreement, in which he took a prominent part, Dr. Murchison said:

"The American side now has security and stability, where formerly there existed the threat of immeasurable and overwhelming competition. The Japanese are saved from the expense, the discomfort and the misinterpretations, the recriminations, the bickerings and the hazards involved in a campaign of political action looking to protection through legislation, or the exercise of executive powers.

"The Japanese will have for the years 1937 and 1938 a volume of business greatly in excess of any previously enjoyed in the American market."

Dr. Zimmermann said the popular idea was that economic nationalism was wholly bad and that internationalism was some idealistic humanitarian policy which would, if generally adopted, usher in a millennium.

"I believe," he went on, "that there can be no one-sided nationalism nor one-sided internationalism until the world has succeeded in taking the bold jump into the unknown by replacing national sovereignties with a new super-national cosmopolitan super-sovereignty.

"The extent to which a country can afford to support a program of economic internationalism depends upon what political institutions it can afford to support. These, in turn, depend to a large extent upon the position the country occupies with regard to economic opportunities. To advocate economic internationalism in the sense of wholesale reduction of trade barriers, regardless of their obvious utility or their vital necessity, is to court disaster."

Columbia Buys Broadway Hit

What is said to be the largest sum every paid for film rights to a stage or fiction property, since the advent of talking pictures, is involved in the deal completed in January by Columbia Pictures for the purchase of the current Broadway hit, "You Can't Take It With You", written by the famous team of George Kaufman and Moss Hart.

Spirited bidding among major motion picture companies for film rights to the farcical comedy, which opened at the Booth Theater, New York City, on December 14th, 1936, and immediately entered the "Standing Room Only" class, has been going on for some time, with the opening figure a high one, and the tensity of the competition growing as the figure soared.

The New York Times said of the comedy "Hilarious is not the word for 'You Can't Take It With You'; something stronger is needed", and the Herald Tribune characterized it as "assuredly belonging among first-rank hits of the season."

George Kaufman has been responsible, in collaboration, for twenty-seven Broadway productions, most of which were in the hit class, and Hart is also well known for numerous Broadway successes. Together, the co-authors of "You Can't Take It With You" wrote the two previous hits "Once In a Lifetime" and "Merrily We Roll Along".

Columbia Pictures is the company which produced "Mr. Deeds Goes To Town", the Frank Capra production starring Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur which was selected by the New York Motion Picture critics as the best picture of 1936.

Universal Buys Magazine Stories

The New Universal has announced the purchase of two magazine stories. One is by Wadsworth Camp and is entitled "West Coast Limited". Ford Beebe is assigned to write the script, and in all probability he will handle the direction.

The other story is entitled "Washington Correspondent" and was written by William Rankin, who has developed into one of Hollywood's most prolific and successful screen writers. Robert T. Shannon is collaborating with Rankin in the preparation of "Washington Correspondent" for the screen.

Germany Makes Strong Bid For Chinese Trade

Christian Science Monitor

SHANGHAI.—American manufacturers will have to look to their laurels if the United States is to maintain its predominant position in the Chinese import market. Figures just released show that America's share of the trade for 1936 amounted to 19.6 per cent as compared with 18.9 per cent for 1935, but during the same period Germany's quota leaped ahead from 11.18 per cent to 15.9 per cent.

Both America and Britain are feeling the pinch of government subsidized competition from Germany and other Continental countries to China far below cost, in some cases, in order to keep their factories going and so keep down unemployment at home. Credit terms also are an important factor in the situation. Germany, in particular, is supplying China with railway and other equipment on long-term arrangements with which, in the absence of special assistance American and British business men find it impossible to compete.

"The Germans are taking a long view of the China market," one veteran British trader pointed out to this correspondent. "They feel that if they can establish themselves here over a long period, then when new opportunities come along they will be in line for them. They are gradually winning a firm foothold from which it may be difficult to dislodge them."

British Bestir Themselves

In order to study the possibility of extending British credit facilities Mr. W. M. Kirkpatrick is now visiting China as special representative of the British export credit guarantee department. As outlined in a press interview on his arrival in Shanghai on Jan. 11, his particular function is "to investigate the credit worthiness of buyers in China of all descriptions of British goods, and submit recommendations in this regard."

Commenting on Mr. Kirkpatrick's mission, local British merchants point out that the premia charged in return for insuring credit risks must be kept down to the lowest possible figure if British manufacturers are to be enabled to compete successfully with subsidized Continental exports.

What American manufacturers must take into account in future is the fact that signficant changes are taking place in the character of China's import trade. Imports of consumer goods such as wheat, flour and cotton are on the down grade for the simple reason that the Chinese themselves are producing these commodities in ever larger quantities. Native competition is asserting itself too in other fields, notably simple tools, soap, paints, oil, varnishes and chemicals.

Buys More Capital Goods

Today the tendency is for China's imports from abroad to consist more and more of capital goods such as machinery and railway material. Modern China represents an expending market for the equipment required both for industrial development and for public utilities such as electric light plants and water works. Mining plant also is considered likely to open up as a promising field in the near future, and opportunities are foreseen in connection with communications, transport and the improvement of docking and wharf facilities.

In China there is a very close relation between good crops and increased imports. Last year's harvests, especially cotton, were exceptionally good and this has been reflected in Shanghai by a marked improvement in the textile industry, which is perhaps the best barometer by which to gauge the economic situation of the country as a whole. Owing to the depression from which the industry had suffered during the past two or three years many plants had closed down altogether, while others had cut down their working time or else reduced wages. Now virtually every mill is working full time and wage cuts have been at least practically restored. In consequence of the improved outlook several textile undertakings are known to contemplate important extensions this year.

German Trader Enterprising

If advantage is to be taken of the developing opportunities in China the peculiar requirements of the Chinese market must be carefully studied, and in this respect the German business man hitherto has proved far more enterprising than his rivals. The German trader finds out what the Chinese wants and supplies him with it. He realizes it is no use offering a man a $100 article if he can only afford to buy a $50 one.

American manufacturers usually are not interested in supplying only part of an industrial plant. They want to handle the whole proposition or nothing. The fact is, however, that the Chinese are now making many machinery parts themselves and they want to import only those parts which they are unable to make. This is true also of radio and other electrical equipment.

The China market offers a promising field for foreign manufacturers but the business is likely to go to those who devote most attention to studying the customer's requirements and who will supply him with what he wants rather than with what he ought, perhaps, to want.

The Bird

The dutiful nephew took his dear old aunt to a football match. As the game progressed, things happened.

"And why," said the elderly lady eventually, "is that man walking away?"

"He's been sent off for a foul."

"Dear me, Bertie! Now is that what you mean by getting the bird?"

border the route reaches its terminus, Vancouver, by way of Trail and Princeton. Thus an "all-red" route will be established from Atlantic to Pacific, and according to the schedule laid down a maximum elapsed time of 17 hours will we permitted from Montreal to Vancouver—a distance of some 2,500 miles. Even this time may be reduced.

Flying The Beam

Several million dollars will have to be invested in ground services. At six main centers the Government is setting up meteorological services which will provide 24-hour weather forecasts, and these will reciprocate with the United States weather service. Every landing field will be provided with the latest reports by means of teletype machines, and at any time en route pilots will be able to pick up accurate accounts of weather conditions ahead. Between Montreal and Vancouver it is proposed to establish 19 radio range beacons, so that for every section of the 2,500 miles pilots will be able to "fly the beam." It will be necessary to construct a great number of landing fields. This is especially difficult in the bush country of north-western Ontario, where large clearings have to be made in heavily timbered ground; levelling and seeding have then to be undertaken before a suitable runway is produced. Landings are to be established every 50 miles, so that even in the Rockies a pilot will always be within about 20 minutes' flying distance of a safe landing.

When this service is complete it will be possible to travel and to ship goods by air not only from Cape Breton Island to Vancouver but direct to Aklavik and Great Bear Lake within the Arctic Circle. Almost every outlying community will be linked to both oceans by airplane. The high-grade silver and radium deposits in the Great Bear Lake district were, in fact, discovered by airplane, and their development has been made possible by a regular service from Edmonton. Mining engineers have been flown in and out of the district in a week, whereas previously they had to hazard a long and adventurous journey down the Mackenzie River, so that there was little of the "open season" left in which to carry out their investigations. In one instance, half a dozen men and 77 dogs were flown several hundreds of miles to their trapping lines in the Barrens; in others, entire mills have been transported—section by section—into remote areas. If the "tump-line" has not entirely disappeared, it has at least been ousted from its position of supremacy in bush travel; and the term "to Hudson Bay it"—meaning to journey in the bush in comfort—has acquired a new significance.

Canadians look forward to an even greater future for aviation in their country. With a trans-Canada service in full operation Montreal will grow in importance as a communicating link between the eastern United States of America and the North-West; once the transatlantic airway becomes a reality Montreal will become the main transhipment center of the North American continent. Canada will provide the vital link in an "all-red" route—perhaps to the Far East.

Court of Claims Record

The proceedings of the Court of Claims, which heard and determined claims of services to be performed at the Coronation, have now been published. A limited number of copies, price £1 1s. each, may be had on application to the Crown Office, House of Lords, S. W. 1. The volume comprises lists of the claims adjudicated upon by the Court set up under the Royal Commission dated May 28, 1936, and again under the Royal Commission dated December 18, 1936, with judgments and decisions. Transcripts of the shorthand notes of the proceedings are added, together with a copy of the pedigree which accompanied the petition of Lord Hastings in support of his claim to carry the Great Spurs.

Traffic Map For Police

Scotland Yard's arrangements for dealing with the Coronation traffic will be facilitated by the use of a large map, which has been drawn by police officers, working under the direction of Sub Divisional-Inspector Downer. It measures 12ft. by 10ft., and the ceremonial area is shown in detail. The route of the Royal Procession is indicated by red tape, and colored pins mark vantage points, barriers, ambulance stations, localities where crowds can safely assemble, and temporary refreshment places. The pins also show the parts of the route which will be lined by the various police contingents, and other details to assist smooth working. Other colored pins with smaller heads indicate temporary telephones, and where police officials will be stationed to deal with any traffic control emergency.

Australian Labor For Convention On Constitution

Christian Science Monitor

ADELAIDE S. Aust.—The attitude of the Australian Labor Party toward the referenda on the control of aviation and marketing powers was defined by the party's federal leaders, James Curtin, in an interview he gave here prior to returning to his home in Western Australia for the parliamentary recess.

Mr. Curtin made it clear that the party was opposed to any piecemeal alterations of the Constitution, and considered a convention was necessary to reshape it to meet the problems of the next 25 or 30 years. Discussing the need for more population in Australia, he said that he opposed all systems of mass migration, because this policy had been proved to be economically unsound.

A complete overhauling of the Constitution, emphasized Mr. Curtin, is the only means of preventing anomalies arising from its failure to meet modern requirements. His view was that the holding of referenda prejudiced the acceptance of this course.

Faced by New Objectives

"The problems which members of the convention faced when they were forming the present Constitution were predominantly political. Those which are facing Australia now are chiefly economical and financial," he added. "All systems of mass migration represent an unremunerative addition to the public debt, particularly affecting the budgets of the individual states," he contends.

"Our right course is to make the country economically attractive to desirable individuals, particularly Britishers," he continued. "An infiltration of people into Australia because they believe it to be a better country in which to begin a satisfactory life should be the ideal behind any migration scheme."

Mr. Curtin emphasized his strong belief in the need for better provision for the support of large families in Australia. It is useless, he says, to complain about the falling birth rate when economic conditions unquestionably prejudiced the position of a husband and wife living on a low wage, who had children in excess of the number upon which the Arbitration Courts fixed the minimum standard.

Spread of Population

It is vitally important, he said, that measures be taken to encourage a better distribution of the existing population. It is equally important when evolving defense measures, that the question of spreading the country's essential industries throughout the states, instead of having them concentrated in and around the capital cities, should be considered.

He added that to distribute the population, it is necessary to distribute the occupational opportunities. Unless this is done, not only will the country lose its natural increase in population, but tthe tendency for industry to gravitate to the capital cities—chiefly Melbourne and Sydney—would become even greater.

"It is here that a national policy must be evolved for what would appear to be an uneconomical objective in itself, but which is an essential move if we are to become a great nation in years to come," Mr. Curtin declared "Although it is cheaper to establish a new industry alongside existing industries, the question which Parliament has to consider is whether it might not be better in the long run to encourage new industries in parts of the Commonwealth which at present lack employment opportunities calculated to hold and develop the population."

Pollak Appears

The violinist was often searching for more volume. This did not produce the most desirable effect, especially when the G string came under such treatment. Mr. Sirota made the best of his share of the work. The music is more or less a sonata and the pianist showed good feeling and understanding for ensemble work. It is hoped that he will bend his interest to chamber music and repair a sadly neglected form of music in this community.

Under French Influence

The name Jacques-Dalcroze is usually associated with rhythmic studies. This composer studied at the Paris Conservatory where his music came under French influence. He first developed rhythmic exercise as an adjunct to musical practice and later applied this work to bodily motion. His work in this field has left a deep impression on modern ballet methods and systems of physical training. Mr. Pollak played the second of Jacques-Delcroze's two violin concertos. This work is divided into two movements entitled, "Dal Largo Doloroso Al Doloroso Appasionato" and "Dal Moderato con Brio Ostinato All' Allegro con Gioja."

If we were to pigeon-hole the Jacques-Dalcroze concerto we would file it with the modern French music of Faure and Chausson. It makes use of very interesting advanced harmonic progressions, and where one would expect the composer to be expounding his theories on rhythm, he is instead carried away by rich melodic lines of rare beauty. We have reason to believe the work was not written for violin and orchestra. The exquisite figuration played so masterfully by Mr. Sirota in the last movement was without doubt music designed especially for the piano.

The material highly in the first movement is melodic underwent skillful treatment. This type of melody is not the least difficult to develop. The composer often resorted to sudden unrelated modulations which require clean playing to properly define the new key. This movement was of an improvization in more respects than one.

The second movement brought forth the much expected rhthymic ideas of the composer. Starting with what was obviously fundamental in this respect, a structure was built depending very much on rhythmic support. To merely say the work is effective would be to underestimate. It has not great depth, but that can be said of much music that commands respect. It is unified despite the use of lyric material for a large form. Even for this alone the work has a right to live.

2 New Pilots Help

his life to the navy and has had, perhaps, as large a part in shaping the basic policies and doctrines of the service as any officer of his time. Upon his professional advice and wealth of experience Mr. Edison and Mr. Swanson will lean heavily.

And yet, like most men who have lived their lives upon great waters, Admiral Leahy is a simple, direct character, taking pleasure in small things. On the day that it was announced that he was to succeed Admiral Standley as "Opnav," he received the news of the birth of a grandson. He was deluged with congratulations on his advancement to the highest post the navy has to offer, but the admiral himself was bursting with pride at the debut of another Leahy.

The new four-starred admiral is not immersed in dignity nor in the knowledge of his own self-importance, contrary to most cartoonists' conceptions of admirals. But he has a stern, somewhat gaunt face, deep-lined and creased and with a hint of shrewdness about the mouth, and a firm chin. He is blessed with a sense of humor, and his smile—which is at the command of his little granddaughter—lights up his whole face. He is "very tender-hearted"—though, as a subordinate who served at sea with him phrased it, "he conceals it well."

"I will never forget his rage," this officer recalled, "when he saw a sailor throw a cat into the drydock."

But it is his ability to concentrate on one thing until he has achieved his end—his refusal to permit interference or diversion from that single objective—that is the real key to his character.

Admiral Leahy is green to his job as "Opnav," though well fitted for it by his experience, and he won't talk much about his program for the next two years. But it is plain that already he has ideas, which he will not hesitate to impart to his superiors, and it is plain that he has profited by studying the methods of his predecessors. Like Admiral Standley he refuses to discuss international affairs, though he speaks guardedly of the navy and its needs.

"In America it isn't considered proper for naval officers to talk on matters of international import," he says. "It is the duty of those in the navy to advise the officials of the government and let the officials speak for themselves."

William Daniel Leahy was born a long way from the sea, in the little town of Hampton, Iowa, on May 6, 1875. His father had been an army captain during the Civil War, and the son yearned for the military life. The family moved from Hampton when the future admiral was still quite small and later Mr. Leahy tried to get his son as appointment to West Point from Wisconsin. But the West Point appointments were all filled up, while those to Annapolis were going begging; so, instead of riding with a troop of cavalry along the Mexican border, young Leahy went to the Naval Academy and learned the strange and difficult ways of the sea.

Leahy was graduated from the academy just about in time for the Spanish-American war and was a naval cadet aboard the Oregon. He was in at the death at the Battle of Santiago, and at the termination of the war participated in the Philippine campaign.

He rose through the various ranks in the navy, specializing in gunnery. In those early days he made his own gun sights, or bought telescopes out of his own pocket.

"We took a tube like a condenser tube with a peephole in the rear and cross wires in the front," the admiral recalled the other day, "and somehow we hit the target."

Leahy, as a commander, had the old Dolphin during thte World War and cruised about the West Indies looking for a German raider.

"It's a good thing, I guess, we didn't find her," he chuckled. "She had twice as many guns and more speed than we had."

The Dolphin did intercept a merchant ship supplying the German raider and forced her into Santa Lucia.

In the latter part of the war Leahy had the transport Princess Matoika and received a Navy Cross for his services. He was promoted to captain in 1918 and after the war was in command of the Chattanooga and the St. Louis on duty in Turkish waters.

Leahy was commissioned a rear admiral in 1930 and was promoted to the temporary rank of admiral last year when he took over command of the Battle Force, his last post at sea before coming to Washington on his present duty.

Then There Were Three

A quartet of longshoremen were singing on the waterfront when the tenor fell off the dock into the bay. The incident passed unnoticed by the leader, but he realized that something was wrong with the harmony.

"'Smatter with you boys?" he complained. "One of you don't sound right."

"It's Jack," rumbled the basso, solemnly. "He's off quay."

EVOLUTION OF JAPANESE SWORDS

By MITSUGI TESHIGAWARA

In the study of nihonto it is necessary, first of all, to know the terms given to the various parts of a sword-blade.

(1) Sori (a curve).

"Sori" is the term given to the engravings of the blade towards the back.

In ancient times, the sword blades had no curves. In fact, the ancient swords were what we called straight swords as is shown in fig. 1.

It was some time during the year 734 A.D. that curved swords appeared. It was in 937 that completely curved swords as is shown in fig. 2 were produced.

During this period battles were chiefly fought on horse-back, and as the fighting instinct of the Japanese was such that they prefered cutting or striking the enemy rather than sabbing, and since for cutting and striking curved swords were more convenient, the warriors began to use curved swords.

It was during the Sengokujidai (the age of the civil wars—1336—1392) when the European art of fencing was introduced, that the curve began to be smaller as is shown in fig. 3.

(2) Mune (the ridge)

"Mune" is the term given to the whole back of the sword blade as is shown in fig. 4.

(3) There are three kinds of "mune" as is shown in the figs. 5, 6 and 7.

(4) Shinogi.

Between the cutting edge and the mune and extending from hilt to point on both sides is a straight ridge which is a little nearer to the mune than to the cutting edge. This is called "shinogi". This part is a little higher than the blade level. "Shinogi" is shown in fig. 8.

(5) Mihaba (the width of the blade).

Kissaki (the point of a sword).

Mihaba is the term given to the width of the blade between the edge and the mune as is shown in fig. 9.

The shaded part as shown in fig. 10 is called "kissaki."

(6) "Hi" and "chokoku".

Between the shinogi and the mune is a shallow depression which is called hi as is shown by the shaded part in fig. 11.

There are various kinds of hi as shown in figs. 12-20.

The engraving of letters and pictures on the sword-blades by means of a chisel is called "chokoku."

In olden days the engraving of the titles of Deities, Buddha and of sacred persons had a religious significance for the swordsmith or the wearer of the swords, but later on the engraving of the titles of Deities and Buddha and of other sacred personalities, of plants and flowers and animals began to be done for the sake of ornament.

There are very exquisite specimens among the ancient engravings.

It was said that in the middle of the Kamakura era engraving was very much in vogue. From the time of the Mongolian invasion to the Namboku-cho period (1336-1393) the engravings had rapidly increased. In those days the titles of Deities and Buddha and images of Buddha were greatly used for engraving.

During the Muromachi period (1394-1565) the engravings grew more and more popular, but in those days there were two types of swords—the ready-made sword, and the made-to-order sword. Since ready-made swords were meant for practical use, they were not much engraved, while ordered swords which were kept as personal treasures had elaborate engravings on them.

By the time of the great generals Toyotomi (1535-1598) and Tokugawa (1600-1867) the designs had become more elaborate and picturesque, but in those days chokoku were mostly done by engravers rather than swordsmiths. There are various kinds of engravings as are illustrated by figs 24-31.

(7) Yakiba (a tempered edge)

In the blade there is a white part. This is called yakiba. "Yakiba" forms a sort of design, as is shown in fig. 32. This is called "hamon".

There are various kinds of "hamon" as shown in figs. 33-53.

(8) Boshi.

"Yakiba" at the point of the blade is called "boshi."

There are various kinds of "boshi" as shown in figs. 54-62.

The History of Nihonto

The Japanese swords had shown considerable development even in ancient times. It seems that there might have been many master-smiths, but since most of the swords which exist today were dug out from the earth, it is difficult to find out the names of sword-smiths on account of the rust. Moreover, in olden days most of the sword-smiths did not engrave their names on the blade.

Even in the age of the gods there were some swords which had been introduced from China or Korea, but in the reign of the Emperor Ojin (270) a great number of sword-smiths immigrated from these countries. In those days the metallurgy of China and Korea were more advanced than that of Japan. In those days, the Japanese swordsmiths were called "yamatokajibe," and those who immigrated from China and Korea were called "karakajibe," but it seems that more importance was attached to "karakajibe."

It was in the beginning of the Naracho period that these two lines of swordsmiths were assimilated, and the Naracho type straight swords began to be produced for the first time. This was indeed the origin of nihonto which is unique in the world.

According to the Statute of Taiho which was promulgated in the first year of Taiho in the reign of the Emperor Mombu the swordsmiths were ordered to engrave their names on the swords.

The closing period of Naracho is supposed to mark the end of the history of ancient swords.

It was since the beginning of the Heian period (794-1192) that master-smiths began to increase in various places in the country, and in the reign of the Emperor Sujaku (931-946) a great many famous master-smiths appeared in all parts of the country. The art of sword making in our country made a remarkable advancement during the Kamakura period (1185-1333). Indeed, this period was said to be the golden age for "Nihonto."

What reasons can be given for this rapid advancement?

1 Owing to the great war between the Genji and the Heike, thousands of swords were needed. The actual battles taught the swordsmiths how to improve the swords.

2. The Emperor Gotoba (1184-1189) had great interest in swords. His Majesty personally attempted to make swords. He had handsomely treated the swordsmiths by awarding ranks and titles to them. That famous Mongolian invasion had also a great effect on the improvement of the swords of this country.

3. The government and the people united in emergency to produce splendid swords.

4. The improvement of the arms of the Japanese army took place against the advanced tactics and arms of the Chinese army.

Owing to the revolt of the war lord Ashikaga against the royal army the war lasted for nearly eighty years throughout the whole country. Naturally the warriors became braver and they loved to wear long swords.

In the reign of the Emperor Gokomatsu (1393) the wars between the North and the South dynasties came to an end, and the country once more became the land of peace and happiness. Since the people were quite tired of the bloody wars, people of all ranks began to love and praise art, singing and dancing and musical performances. It was indeed in those days (1482-1490) that the famous and gorgeous Higashiyaja culture had come out.

In addition to this, many changes in the manners and customs of the people had taken place since that time. Of these, the way of wearing swords on the part of the samurai was the most prominent one. That is to say, up till then the warriors adopted the method of wearing the swords as is shown in fig. 63, but since that time they began to adopt the method shown in fig. 64.

Up till then, the length of the long swords was mostly about three feet; that is why, if the warriors were to adopt the new methods of wearing the swords there was a fear that the tips of the scabbards might touch the ground. For this reason, since then much shorter swords—the length of which being 2ft. 4 or 5 inches—began to be produced, and the long swords had been cut short for practical use.

It was in those days that wakizashi (a short sword, the length of which being 1 ft. 4 or 5 inches) began to be produced. Since those days warriors began to wear daisho (two swords one being long and the other short). During the age of the civil wars a great number of swords were demanded by the samurai who arose all over the country. Naturally, the number of mastersmiths greatly increased, and at the same time a great number of carelessly manufactured swords began to circulate in society. Most of these swords are of no use at present, but there are some superior swords which had been specially made for the war lords of those days.

In the early days of the Tokugawa era (1600-1867) the military art was in the zenith of prosperity, and many magnificent swords were produced. It is a regret to us to know that the art of sword making greatly degenerated in the closing period of the Tokugawa era. It was Kawabe Hachiro Masahide who came to Yedo at the closing period of the Shogunate, and had raised his voice for the improvement of the swords. It was due to him that the art of sword making was preserved till this day.

Alchemy, Now Laughed At, Once Was Honest

By DR. THOMAS M. BECK

About ten years ago Erich von Ludendorff, the most brilliant of Germany's World war generals, was approached by one Franz Tausend, a man with an interesting proposition. Backed by sufficient financing, Tausend believed that he could convert certain cheap chemicals into gold. Ludendorff turned over to him a large part of his savings. When the anticipated profits of the scheme failed to materialize Ludendorff and the other investors had Tausend arrested.

From his cell Tausend indignantly demanded an opportunity to prove his innocence of any attempt to deceive. For the sake of justice he was allowed to demonstrate his process in the laboratories of the German mint. He was supplied with chemicals of tested purity, which he handled only in the presence of a jury of chemists. He ignited a mixture of lime, mercury, sodium, and potassium and cooked this with lead chloride. When he got through the chemists analyzed his product and found it contained a few grains of gold, which apparently had been produced at a cost of only $2 a pound.

The chemists were astounded, since this was quite reverse of what existing chemical theory would predict. Scarcely less surprising was the fact that Herr Tausend had never studied chemistry, but was a plumber by trade, and a none too competent one.

Fortunately for the gold standard, however, it was found that Tausend had previously inserted a wad of gold leaf into one of his cigarets and had flicked the ash into the crucible. As a result of this finding the rascal was sent to prison.

This is not an isolated case. In 1898 a certain English Jack-of-all-trades by the name of Stephen Emments announced the discovery of a method of converting silver into an alloy of silver and gold. To prove it he sent a brick of the alloy, which he claimed to have made, to the American assay office, which verified its gold content. Backed by this success, he sold stock in his project and paid dividends on the stock by selling more stock. He got into trouble when the authorities found that he was really unable to make gold.

In 1867 the Emperor Franz Josef of Austria-Hungary conferred with three suave persons, the Conde de Fresnoy Landres, Col. Jiminez de la Rosa, and Father Roccatani. These three pointed out that there was lots of gold in California, and also a large amount of silver, mercury, and California sunshine. Obviously the gold must have been formed by the action of sunshine on the other two metals, and the three men had found a way in which Austrian sunshine could be used to bring this change about.

The emperor gave them a grant of money and told them to demonstrate their process under close supervision. They set the chemists to heating certain chemicals for a prolonged period. After four months the material was analyzed and no gold was found, but the three men had disappeared and were never heard from again. Subsequent investigation revealed that the names they gave were not their real ones.

Yet the chemists who exposed these swindlers hardly could show any great indignation at them. In fact, they should have been more than a little reverent, since they were seeing their science as it once was. The science of chemistry is a direct descendant of the medieval science of alchemy the principal activity of which was the attempt to transmute base metals into gold.

The science, if we may call it that, had its origin about 2,000 years ago in the cosmopolitan city of Alexandria at the mouth of the Nile, where Greek philosophy first came into contact with Egyptian technology. Its founder, according to tradition, was a Greek named Hermes, whose name we still honor whenever we speak of a container as being hermetically sealed.

Since men love gold, it was only natural that the followers of Hermes, interested as they were in the transformations of matter, should attempt to convert cheaper substances into gold. Only fragmentary records remain of their attempts, but it appears that the successful accomplishment of the project was claimed by the first female scientist, Mary the Jewess, who is also said to have invented that piece of laboratory appartus known as the water bath. French chemists still recognize her priority in the invention by calling it the bain marie.

Mary's method of manufacturing gold was not very complicated. She simply melted up equal weights of copper and gold. The resulting metal resembled gold and weighed twice as much as the gold used in making it. Obviously it was an alloy so crude that it could not get past the door of an assay office today, and even at that time probably did not fool any of the experts at the imperial mint. Still we can hardly believe that Mary and her colleagues were guilty of intentional deception. The very fact that she published her method is proof of her sincerity.

When the Arabs conquered Egypt in the seventh century they quickly absorbed the culture of their subjects and soon were adding their own contributions to it. A number of Arab scholars became interested in this science of transforming matter and gave it the name of "al khem," which has been variously translated as "the black art" or "the Egyptian art."

By the tenth century the Arabs and Moors had cornered most of the world's culture and numbered among their scholars such great alchemists as Geber, Avicenna, Rhazes, and Averroes. They invented distillation, and their influence is still preserved in our use of such words as alcohol and alkali, which are of Arabic origin, and even the word chemistry, which is derived from al khem by way of alchemy.

From the Moorish universities in Spain the knowledge of alchemy gradually filtered into Europe during the early middle ages. Inasmuch as the knowledge of reading and writing was limited almost exclusively to the clergy, the church at first supplied almost all of the alchemists. Among the greatest of the early European alchemists, Roger Bacon was a Franciscan monk. Albertus Magnus and Thomas Aquinas were Dominican friars, and Arnoldus Villanovanus was a professor at the University of Barcelona.

During its centuries of travel from Egypt to Europe alchemy underwent certain modifications. It was no longer primarily a study of the nature of matter, but had become a search for two hypothetical substances, the elixir of life and the philosopher's stone. The former was an essence supposedly capable of giving its user eternal youth. The latter, the object of far greater interest, was a material that could change base metals into gold.

It is not correct to assume that the medieval alchemists were fakers like the man who swindled General von Ludendorff. For the most part they were honest and intelligent scientists who were simply following a mistaken idea. Their beliefs were quite reasonable in view of the knowledge available at the time.

They argued somewhat in this manner: Is the change of lead into gold any more remarkable than the change of a seed into a tree? It is known that the properties of gold can be changed by alloying it with baser metals; is it not possible that the baser metals are gold contaminated with impurities? The Creator does not produce an adult man all at once, but allows him to develop from infancy; is it not likely that he would similarly allow gold, the noblest of metals, to evolve to its present state by way of the less noble metals?

During the nineteenth century it was more fashionable to smile at the futile efforts of the alchemists, because it was then believed that the various elements, including lead and gold, were incapable of being converted into each other. Now we know that under certain conditions the atoms of one element can change into those of another, although such conversions probably never will be industrially practical. Ironically enough, the product of such changes is frequently lead, but never gold.

The medieval alchemists did not enjoy a very high social standing. It was popularly believed that they consorted with demons in their efforts to learn the secrets of nature. Moreover, as time went on the profession was afflicted with an increasing number of charlatans, more adept at extracting gold from the pockets of gullible patrons than from lead. Consequently alchemy was officially frowned upon by both church and state.

Men of keen scientific abilities, like Bacon and Aquinas and Raymond Lully, were compelled to keep their scientific interest as secret as possible. Bacon, one of the greatest scientists of all time, was threatened with imprisonment by Oxford university unless he ceased experimenting. The Dominican order prohibited the study of alchemy among its members. In 1404 all alchemists were ordered to leave England, although this edict never was thoroughly enforced. On another occasion a certain duke of Wurttemberg, who probably had been fleeced, erected a special gallows for the exclusive use of alchemists. Appropriately, the frame was gilded.

Because of the need of secrecy, and because they believed that the common knowledge of how to make gold would do away with the divinely ordained poverty of the masses, the alchemists either kept notes in code or described their experiments in a fantastic jargon that both amuses and exasperates translators.

For instance, they called gold the red lion, silver the lily bridge, sulphur the yellow scorpion, mercury the dragon, and lead the black crow. Some of their terms exist at the present time—aqua regia (royal water, sal ammoniac (salt of Ammon), oleum (oil of vitriol), sugar of lead, butter of antimony, and cream of tartar. A typical alchemist, in describing the dissolving of gold by a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids, might say, "The raging lion devoureth the sun," the meaning of which is as obscure as that of certain present-day patents.

And yet we owe a great debt to the alchemists. Short of money and harassed by authority, they pursued a goal that always seemed just a little ahead of them; a quest all the more pathetic because it was hopeless.

Living on crusts in order to buy charcoal for their furnaces, and clay crucibles and stills that were always breaking, they distilled and calcined everything on which they could lay their hands, even such odd materials as snakes, dog milk, and human brains. They discovered sulphuric acid by distilling cooperas, alcohol by distilling wine, alum by calcining a mixture of clay, sulphuric acid, and salt, phosphorus by distilling dried urine and sand, and formic acid by distilling ants. From their failures has grown the modern science of chemistry.

Since we like happy endings, it is appropriate to mention that the last great alchemist found gold, but not in the way he expected. Around 1700 Johann Friedrich Bottger persuaded Augustus, the elector of Saxony, to finance his alchemical researches in return for a share of the gold produced. Results were not forthcoming as quickly as the elector desired, so Bottger was locked in his laboratory with orders to make gold within a certain time or else suffer an unpleasant fate.

Bottger's ingenuity was greatly stimulated. As the deadline approached he gave up gold making, invented hard fired porcelain, and persuaded the elector to accept this discovery instead. As a result Bottger became one of the richest men in Saxony and Dresden china established a reputation for excellence which it has held to this day.

A Bit About Spring

Not many more than a dozen blizzards and cloud-bursts separate us from the beginning of Spring, that delicious season of which the French poet Mallarme wrote, "Voici l'Anglais avec son sang-froid habituel"—a phrase translated by Walter Pater, so appropriately, as "Here comes the Englishman with his usual sanguinary cold."

Tennyson, too, has a perfect reflection of the peculiarly English sentiment, exhibited at this time of year in a couplet which every schoolboy knows—

Many a morning on the moorland did we hear the copses ring
With the sneezes wrung from Amy in the fullness of the Spring.

And, soon, as my daughter Goompy reminds me, the hedges round Abbot's Snorting will be bursting with Ploughman's Nose, Parson's Frolic, and Old Man's Boot.

Ee! Lolla me, lulla dee!

Defensive Measures

"Give me a pair of shin-guards, please," demanded the customer.

"Certainly, sir," the assistant replied, "I hope you have a good game. But really it's almost the cricket season now."

"I know; these are not for football. I'm playing bridge with my wife tonight."

Carbon Electrode Industry

Oriental Economist

In step with a steady expansion in the electro-chemical industry the manufacture of carbon electrodes in Japan has made rapid progress in recent years. Since a fair amount of carbon for electrical uses is produced by consumers for their own consumption and since the firms specializing in supplying the product to the market are of innumerable descriptions, there are few dependable statistics from which to ascertain the scope of production and consumption. Experts, however, estimate the 1936 production at 55,400 metric tons, consisting of 27,000 metric tons for carbide manufacturing purposes, 20,000 for electric furnace, 7,500 for brine electrolyte and 900 for alkaline elecrolysis. The consumption by carbide makers, as can be seen, accounts for half the entire output, and is produced, mainly for their own use, by the Chuo Electric, Showa Fertilizer, Daihoku Industry, Electro-Chemical and Ibigawa Electric companies. The estimated year's production of 27,000 metric tons of carbon for carbide manufacturing purposes compares with 1935's also estimated 25,000, or an increase of about 8 per cent in a year.

Apart from the volume of production, the rate of increase is most pronounced for carbon electrodes employed in the manufacture of aluminium. During 1935 the output of this class of electrodes was almost insignificant, the supply being obtained almost wholly from foreign sources. But in 1936 domestic production rose at one bound to 7,500 metric tons, as listed above, for brine electrolyte. This amount is produced almost entirely by aluminium manufacturing companies, including 4,000 metric tons by Japan Electric Industry, 2,000 by Nichiman Aluminium, and 1,500 by Sumitomi Aluminium. The Japan Aluminium Company has not as yet started operating and naturally is producing no carbon electrodes. The average price of imported electrodes for aluminium-making purposes is around ¥700 per metric ton, which is far above that of competitive goods supplied by domestic manufacturers. But the production cost of this material as turned out by aluminium concerns themselves is still lower, in the neighborhood of ¥150, which is a convincing argument why all aluminium makers should consider the self-supply of electrodes as an essential part of aluminium manufacture. Inclusive of plants being constructed Japan's capacity for aluminium production will shortly reach 20,000 metric tons. It is an accepted rule that in the production of a metric ton of aluminium an equal weight of carbon anodes is consumed; consequently the day may not be far distant when this class of electrode production attains to 20,000 metric tons a year.

The quantity of carbon produced for electric furnace electrodes and other purposes is also increasing rapidly. The 1936 output, estimated at 20,000 metric tons and representing an increase of 33 per cent over the preceding year, was mainly supplied by specialty carbon makers as listed below with output capacity:

Specialty Carbon Producers
(In metric tons)

Japan Carbon	7,000
Tokai Electrode	7,000
Japan Electric Industry	2,400
Showa Electrode	1,800
Toyo Carbon	1,200
Total including other	20,000

Apart from the improvement and extension of manufacturing facilities there has been a marked advance in technique during recent months. Producers last year succeeded in perfecting a process of manufacturing large size electrodes from artificial plumbago, and are thus able to fill a domestic requirement hitherto supplied exclusively by imported goods. The achievement marked an epoch in Japan's carbon-making industry. This country is still dependent on foreign sources for minor items of carbon products such as graphite brushes, the manufacture of which presents certain technical difficulties.

As development of the electro-chemical industry has only started and much remains to be done, the future of the carbon industry is felt to be highly promising. Nevertheless, a rather too accelerated expansion of the latter industry has measurably depressed the market for its products as compared with levels some time ago. High grade electrodes made of artificial graphite are now worth slightly below ¥1,000 per metric ton, as contrasted to a ¥1,500-¥1,600 range quoted earlier, while for lower grade materials the price depreciation has been even more marked. The profit earning position of the specialty carbon producers has suffered appreciably as their paid up capitalization was augmented somewhat abruptly in order to finance the expansion of their manufacturing facilities. This situation is naturally reflected in their dividends. For example, Japan Carbon reduced its dividend rate to 13 per cent for the second half-year period of 1936 from 20 per cent for the same term of 1935. During the same period Tokai Electrode reduced its payments from 16 per cent to 12 per cent.

In spite of this situation, the demand for carbon products is rising in all fields without interruption. The electric steel making industry especially is in for a period of revival in connection with the prevailing higher prices for iron and steel products, which bightens the prospects for accelerated carbon requirements. It is altogether probable that the carbon producers have already been reached the worst period of revenue conditions.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

Social and Personal Notes

Miss Eiko Takahashi and Mr. Kiichiro Tsukakoshi, whose engagement has recently been announced.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

The engagement of Miss Eiko Takahashi, youngest daughter of the late Korekiyo Takahashi, former Premier and Finance Minister, and Mr. Kiichiro Tsukakoshi, Director of the Kounkwan Hotel, Ikao hot springs, has been announced officially. The wedding ceremony will take place in January 1938. This picture was taken as they attended the wedding party of their teacher at the Tokyo Kaikwan Hall, Marunouchi.

TAMAKI MIURA GIVES CONCERT

A Musical Concert will be held by Mrs. Tamaki Miura at the Nihon Seinen Kaikan at 7 p.m. May 5, for the benefit of the Salesian Professional School (Tokyo Ikuei Kogei Gakko).

This school, recognized by the Governor of Tokyo but two years ago, is still in its infancy. Although the Salesian have more than 800 Professional Schools spread throughout the world, this is the first one in Japan.

Up to the present it has catered for the training of printers and tailors only, about forty Japanese boys receiving both their intellectual and professional education here.

The aim of the concert is to provide the means of supplying both materials and machines for the equipment and development of this school.

Tickets, for adults, are at 3 yen, 2 yen, 1 yen, and for school children, at ¥0.50.

JAPAN-BRITISH SOCIETY DINNER

Baron Gonsuke Hayashi, chairman of the council, has consented to preside at the Japan-British Society Dinner to be given at the Imperial Hotel May 6 in honor of the British Ambassador and Lady Clive and the Canadian Minister and Mrs. Bruce.

The Tokyo Madrigal Club under the leadership of Mr. Kei-ichi Kurosawa, will give an informal concert after the dinner.

More than 120 members of the Society have already signified their intention to be present.

A NIGHT IN DIXIE

An unusual treat will be afforded music lovers in the port city Thursday April 29, when the Negro Spirituals Chorus of Tokyo, assisted by Miss Marie Leidal of Sendai as soloist will give a program of spirituals and folk songs for the benefit of the Yokohama Union Church. The program is entitled "A Night in Dixie" and will be given in the Kuyper Memorial Hall of Ferris Seminary, 178 Bluff, at 9 p.m.

The chorus from Tokyo consists of a number of young couples who have been meeting together on Sunday evenings for several years for the pleasure of studying and singing these American folk-songs. Their concert two years ago in the Imperial Hotel Auditorium for the benefit of the Kobokan Settlement received much favorable comment and there have been many requests for another public appearance. Among the numbers they will sing in Yokohama are: Deep River; My lord, What a Mornin'; Joshua Fit de Battle of Jericho; Steal Away; Swing Low; Down By the Ribber Side; Were Yo There? and Sinner, Please Doan Let Dis Harves' Pass. Those singing Thursday night will be Sopranos: Mrs. A. C. Buffum, Mrs. William G. Hillen, Mrs. Stewart Lillico, Mrs. L. W. Pearson, Miss Helen Thomas; Altos: Miss Marion Arnold, Mrs. R. M. Corbin, Mrs. T. B. Ford, Miss Naomi Muenzenmayer; Tenors: R. M. Corbin, T. B. Ford, Robert Gerhadt, W. G. Hillen; Basses: Warren Muenzenmayer, L. W. Pearson, D. M. Pyle, T. D. Walser. The Director is Mrs. P. V. Gerhardt and the accompanist, Mrs. W. K. Fowler. Miss Marie Leidal who will appear in colored song impersonations needs no introduction to music lovers in the metropolitan area. She has taken part in a number of chorals and cantatas and her recital at the Woman's Club Concert in January was one of the most delightful functions of the season. Among the numbers Miss Leidal will sing are Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen by Burleigh, Going Home by Dvorak, Greatest Miracle of All by Guion, Little Pickanniny Kid by Guion, Mighty Lak' a Rose by Nevin, Nebber Min Mah Honey by Riker. Miss Leidal will also appear as soloist in a special musical program in the Yokohama Union Church on Sunday, May 2.

WAR MINISTER WORSHIPS AT TAMA IMPERIAL MAUSOLEUM

General Gen Sugiyama, War Minister, visited the Tama Imperial Mausoleum at 1 p.m. Saturday by motor-car and worshipped at the mausoleum. He returned to Tokyo at 4 p.m.

FORMER PUPILS OF MRS. HANKA PETZOLD TO HOLD RECITAL

A number of former pupils of Mrs. Hanka Petzold, the well-known soprano singer will hold a recital of vocal music at the Nippon Seinenkai Hall at 1 p.m. April 29 to console their former teacher. Mrs. Kaneko Yanagi, Mrs. Michiko Dunn, Mrs. Minako Hirai, Mrs. Nobuko Hara, Mr. Eiichi Uchida and several others will be on the program.

TEA PARTY FOR PHILIPPINE AND JAPANESE STUDENTS

A tea party was given for the Philippine students and Japanese students, who attended the first students convention held in Tokyo last week, at the official residence of the Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs at Hiroo, Azabu, at 2 p.m. Saturday. Some 60 students of both countries were present.

FRANCO-JAPANESE MUSICAL FESTIVAL A SUCCESS

The Franco-Japanese musical festival was held under the auspices of the Maison Franco-Japonaise de Tokio and the Societe Franco-Japonaise at the Nippon Seinenkai Hall, Aoyama, at 6 p.m. Saturday. Several hundred members, both Japanese and French, were present including a number of prominent persons and the members of diplomatic corps.

At the beginning of the program, Viscount Sukekuni Soga, M.P., and President of the Societe Franco-Japonaise, made an opening address in which he explained the development of amicable relation between Japan and France since the early Meiji Era. Mr. Naotake Sato, Foreign Minister gave an address, and Mr. Charles Arsene Henry, French Ambassador to Japan also made a speech.

Mrs. Okami, the well-known soprano singer sang several French vocal compositions with piano accompaniment by Mr. Paul Rosenstand. A French talkie picture showing horse cultivation was released and Mr. Henri Gil-Marchex, French pianist played three famous piano compositions which were applauded by all. Mr. Michio Miyagi, noted koto player and his company performed two of his own compositions. Miss Midori Nishizaki, well-known dancer played the Fuji Musume with Nagauta accompaniment. At the end of the program, a French talkie "Night Before the Battle" starring Anna Bella was shown.

TO HOLD EXHIBITION

Mr. B. Mukharjee, Indian painter is holding a one-man show at the Honganji Temple, Tsukiji, Kyobashi, from this morning until April 28 under the auspices of the Nippon Bunkwa Renmei. He is one of the five leading pupils of Nandalare Boss, the great modern Indian painter. At the exhibition, he is exhibiting his most recent water color paintings and some etchings.

EXHIBITION OF DRAWINGS AND PAINTINGS

The Studio of Croquis will hold its 7th annual exhibition at the Kinokuniya Book Store, Ginza, from Tuesday until April 29. Mrs. Boubnova and the members of the studio will show their works at the salon.

TO HOLD CELEBRATION PARTY

On the occasion of the 5th anniversary of the foundation of the Musashino School of Music of Tokyo a celebration meeting will be held at the school on May 2 and a garden party will also be given at the school following the celebration meeting.

YOKOHAMA PREPARING TO RECEIVE MISS KELLER

Miss Helen Keller will visit Yokohama on May 1. Prior to her visit, the Christian Association, the Society for the Protection of the Blind of Kanagawa prefecture are preparing a program for her reception.

According to the program, Miss Helen Keller will arrive in Yokohama at noon on May 1. A welcome dinner will be held at the Hotel New Grand of Yokohama by Mr. Kiyoshi Nakai, Governor of the Kanagawa prefecture; Mr. Kinju Ishii, director of the Education Section of the Kanagawa Prefectural Office; Mr. Shuzo Aoki, Mayor of Yokohama City and some high officials of the Municipal Office.

A mass meeting of Yokohama students will be held at the Yokohama Port Memorial Hall at 2 p.m. Miss Keller will make a speech at the meeting.

A public lecture meeting will also be held at the same hall at 7 p.m. in the evening. Miss Keller will spend the night at the hotel.

Miss Keller will visit Yokosuka at 8 a.m. May 2. A meeting will be held at 10:30 a.m. and a welcome party will be held at the Suikosha Naval Club, Yokosuka at noon. She will speak at meeting at the Onari Primary School of Kamakura at 2 p.m. She will go to Hakone in the late afternoon.

The tickets for the meetings in Yokohama and Yokosuka are already sold out. The welcome committee in Yokohama has sold some 2,500 tickets.

ON BOARD TATSUTA MARU

Among the foreign passengers sailing on the N. Y. K. Orient-California liner Tatsuta Maru, from Yokohama, at 3 p.m., Wednesday, April 28, for San Francisco and Los Angeles via Honolulu, are as follows:

Mr. L. T. Barnard, Mr. F. L. Sutten, Mr. Thomas Reed Parry, Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Longmore, Miss H. J. Dishow, Mrs. Gulick and two children, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Schroer and 2 children, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Southwick, Mr. E. T. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Barentzer, Mr. E. Cornish, Mr. W. A. Powell, Mr. and Mrs. F. McLennan and two children, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Westbrook and two children, Mrs. F. R. W. Graham, Miss Jordon, Miss Graham, Mr. M. M. Hodjash, Mr. Montaque Lord, Mr. Santiago Florentino, Mr. M. W. Alexander.

Mr. G. S. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. D. H. E. Dinshaw, Mr. and Mrs. R. Janssen, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Suff, Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Winton, Mr. S. Respinger, Mr. J. B. Clissold, Mr. H. L. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. E. Scrap Trade In US Is Worth Half A Billion Annually

Literary Digest

The junk pedler who picks your neighborhood lot clean of rusted bed-springs, iron pipe and junked car motors pursues a humble calling. Add up the gleanings of 150,000 pedlers throughout the country, however, and throw in the mechanized collections of 700 high-power iron and steel scrap wholesalers, and you have a half-billion dollar industry.

You will also have what the scrap dealers proclaim as a basic industry, for scrap supplies steel producers with more than 50 per cent of their raw material. As a matter of fact, one ton of scrap conserves five tons of natural resources (two tons of iron ore, two tons of coal and one ton of limestone produce one ton of pig iron).

Recently, in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other Atlantic ports, freight-cars groaned under mountains or scrap, awaiting export overseas. Exporters fumed over the shortage of ships. Rail executives also fumed. The scrap was jamming their terminals.

They ordered a halt to the hauling of scrap, barred the use of the railroads to frantic dealers who had found in Europe's rearmament race a sharp stimulant to scrap prices.

Basic Resource

Steel manufacturers in Pittsburgh, lawmakers in Washington, eyed the fight for steel scrap abroad with little enthusiasm and pondered a drive to dam up the junk in this county. Lawmakers argued that practically every important country except the United States has embargoed scrap exports.

But, against the 30,000,000 tons of scrap remelted last year in the U. S., only 2,000,000 tons went abroad.

The lowly pedler who picks up rusty chunks of iron from back lots collectively accounts for only 25 per cent of the scrap tonnage gathered annually. It is the sons of the pedlers of several generations ago, who use fleets of trucks to buy scrap directly from the big users of steel, who account for the 75 per cent of tonnage.

Since the big dealer must pay cash and store his scrap for advantageous prices, he must often tie up large sums of capital. Rusted girders, old locomotives, twisted rails, abandoned machinery flow into his yards. There, overhead electric traveling cranes, equipped with electric magnets, unload trucks. Giant bevel shears, with whale-like jaws, bite mouthfuls from the sides of old steel, cars. "Skull crushers" bash in castings.

Railroads Offer Prize

To big scrap dealers, railroad provide most desirable pickings, since a junked railroad may yield as many as eighty different kinds of scrap, including steel rails, melting steel, boiler plates, steel axles, wrought iron, wheels and locomotive tires.

For instance, Summer & Company, of Columbus, Ohio, specializes in buying up whole railroads and suburban lines. The junk company operates them temporarily, pending liquidation, then chops them up for ultimate remelting into steel.

The Boston Iron and Metal Co., of Baltimore, is still busy with the largest scrapping job ever attempted in this country. From the United States Shipping Board in 1934, the company bought 108 derelict vessels. The junk company is still scrapping them. Eventually, the hulks will yield of $24 a ton for scrap, this operation will gross $24,000,000.

Since the iron and steel scrap industry is composed of many small units, the competition for tonnage is keen and prices fluctuate as swiftly as they do on the stock exchanges.

Although the modern steel scrap industry is twenty-nine years old, it boasted no trade organization until nine years ago when Benjamin Schwartz, lawyer and trade association enthusiast, embarked on a program of bringing order out of price-cutting. The Scrap Iron and Steel Institute, which he formed, today musters a membership that accounts for 90 per cent of all scrap iron and steel gathered in the country.

Australia Scans

one efficient production unit. It appears, therefore, that the size of the market is unlikely to hamper the expansion of Australian manufacturing industries. Division of the market between local and overseas producers will, however, retard expansion and diminish absorptive capacity.

"There are no fundamental reasons why Australian industrial costs should be higher than, say, American costs. A good case can be made out to show that the reason they are higher is that they have been made so by the heavy developmental expenditure incurred in the past which will remain as a burden for some considerable time to come.

"The manufacturing industries are today absorbing new labor at the rate of 50,000 workers per annum. On present production each worker employed sustains 5.2 other inhabitants. If the present rate of expansion in manufacturing industries could be maintained, expansion of manufacturing industries would enable Australia to absorb increase of population at the rate of 300,000 per annum that is, about 250,000 per annum in excess of the natural increases. It is, however, scarcely to be expected that this rate can be maintained."

Finns In Drive

150 kilometers wide along Finnish borders.

There are two almost constant sources of friction between Finland and Russia.

First, a small but vocal minority in Finland clings to the idea that Korelia, whose inhabitants are Finnish in race and speech, should be a part of Finland. But there is little evidence that the Finnish majority has taken this claim seriously since it became apparent that Soviet Russia has no idea of relinquishing Karelia.

Second, religious differences cause irritation. The majority of Finns are devout Lutherans, and are distressed by the thought that many Finnish Lutherans live under Russia's government of militant atheists. Religious refugees, escaping into Finland from Russia, aggravate Finnish feelings by their description of religious persecutions.

But these lesser sources of friction, in Dr. Holsti's opinion, can be submerged in the larger desire for peace. He was able to assure Soviet leaders that his Government will never voluntarily permit a foreign nation to use its islands and waters as a military base. Moscow, in turn, renewed assurances that Finland's independence will be strictly respected. Undoubtedly this exchange of views has diminished tension between these neighbor countries.

College of Harbin and made their visit to Japan under the guidance of Mr. I. A. Mirandoff, director of the College and member of the staff of the Harbin Y.M.C.A. On Friday evening, just before their departure for Kyoto, the visitors were the guests of Mr. Soichi Saito at a sukiyaki party in the Imabun restaurant, and on the afternoon of the same day they were entertained at tea by the Metropolitan Sergius of the Russian Cathedral. On Tuesday they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jorgensen at a buffet supper, after which the party attended the performance at the Takarazuka Theater. On Wednesday evening the English Speaking Society of the Tokyo Y.M.C.A. acted as hosts at a dinner, followed by brief speeches and several musical numbers. Three or four members of the visiting party are excellent musicians and gave freely of their talent on several occasions. Thursday was spent in Nikko. Following several days in the Kyoto-Nara-Osaka region, the party expects to return to Harbin by the end of next week. During their stay in Tokyo they registered at the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A.

The students visiting are Mr. I. A. Mirandoff, Mr. N. I. Boteova, Dr. E. I. Issak, Miss V. G. Buzanova, Miss M. I. Isak, Miss T. J. Slavinskaya, Miss V. V. Kremenskaya, Miss V. S. Vorontsova, Mr. N. D. Vorontsoff, Miss N. V. Nonikoff and Mr. I. Ch. Novikoff.

Norman Brookes Approves Forest Hills Stadium

NEW YORK, April 2—The United States Lawn Tennis Association today released a letter from Norman E. Brookes, president of the Australian Lawn Tennis Association, in which Brookes expressed satisfaction with the Forest Hills courts as the site of the prospective United States-Australian Davis cup matches.

Addressing the U.S.L.T.A. Davis cup committee, Brookes, after visiting the courts, wrote: "I am more than satisfied that with the care and attention the Forest Hills courts are receiving, they should be in excellent condition by the time the matches are to be played and suitable in every respect for an international Davis Cup contest."

Last Tuesday the U.S.L.T.A. was criticized for selecting Forest Hills by Samuel H. Collom of Philadelphia, a member of its own executive committee.

Collom said he had been advised that three members of the Australian team, Jack Crawford, Vivian McGrath, and Cliff Sproule, were "unanimous in condemning Forest Hills."

Collom charged the New York faction of the U. S. L. T. A. with attempting to establish a tennis "dictatorship."

In releasing Brookes' letter, the tennis body declared Brookes well equipped to pass judgment on the Forest Hills courts. They pointed out that he formerly held the Australian singles, British singles and doubles, and United States doubles titles.

Collom revealed he planned to ask that the Davis Cup matches be moved from Forest Hills when the executive committee of the U. S. L. T. A. meets tomorrow in New York.

Before either Australia or the United States gets to the semi-final Davis Cup match, however, they have other teams to beat. The Americans meet Japan at San Francisco, April 30, May 1-2, and on the same days the Australians play Mexico at Mexico City.

Tariff Barriers Blocking Textile In World Trade

Christian Science Monitor

GENEVA, March 31.—Textile workers of the world are sharing in the general industrial recovery—despite high tariff walls and quotas.

Recent monetary developments—the International Labor Office here states in its report to the Tripartite Textile Conference due in Washington, D. C., April 2—are tending to eliminate currency devaluations as an instrument of international competition.

Progress Recorded

Some progress, too, is recorded in the reduction of obstacles to international trade—all of which should help lubricate present efforts toward reconstruction of the textile industry.

But the international struggle for markets goes on. Every textile manufacturing country is trying to get the lion's share of world textile sales. In nearly all countries the domestic textile industry is sheltered by protective tariffs. In addition, some countries actually limit permissible imports by means of quota systems, others by means of rigorous exchange control.

Japanese traders are among the hardest hit. Their national or empire market is limited compared with the United States or Great Britain. Moreover, Japanese cotton goods are excluded from foreign markets. Quota systems favoring British goods and keeping out Japanese operate in most crown colonies. India maintains a preferential tariff as a restriction of Japanese imports. Restrictions against Japan also operate in the Netherland Indies and the Philippines, while France has converted her colonies largely into a preserve for her own textile mills.

British Mills Hit

Although the crown colonies are more or less reserved in favor of the mother country, the British cotton industry, too, has to meet high tariff hurdles, quotas and exchange restrictions to penetrate some of its major markets. Thus, even the tariff preferences in India and in the dominions are contingent upon tariff rates giving protection to Indian, Australian and other home mills as against their Lancashire or Yorkshire competitors.

In the United States—an important outlet for the best grades of British textiles—tariffs have long protected American mills. And of Great Britain's remaining potential trade, most, if not all, is walled in by high protective duties and other trade hindrances. I. L. O. experts declare "it is arguable whether British textile industries do not suffer as much by exclusion from the protected markets of other countries as they gain by the advantages they enjoy in their preferential or sheltered markets."

One factor favorng the United States is its possession of by far the largest domestic market. Like many others, this market shelters behind high tariff walls, which none but the highest grades of British, French and Swiss fabrics are able to surmount. The United States also enjoys advantages in the Philippines and Cuba.

America's Rivals Favored

The remaining American exports seek an entry into Latin-America. But most of the countries south of the Rio Grande maintain restrictions which favor, not the United States, but its major competitors—Germany, Italy and Britain. Moreover, many of these industrially newer countries—notably Mexico and Brazil—are setting up their own domestic industry.

India also has built up an industry almost entirely for its own internal market. Indian mills are protected not only against Japan but against Britain, and Lancashire products still have to pay substantial duties before they can enter the Indian market.

It has been estimated that in India alone there are "intermittently at work 50,000,000 spinning wheels and almost 2,000,000 hand-looms." These looms produce about 40 per cent of the total cloth made in India.

The Indian market is larger than any other except China. It would, in fact, be the greatest if the national wealth and income were greater. But for the cheaper varieties of cotton, India is still the world's largest single market. India also manages to export a substantial surplus to Ceylon, Afghanistan and British African colonies.

Russia Starts Industry

The U. S. S. R. too, has laid down a large plant for manufacturing textiles for a home market which has great commercial potentialities.

Likewise, China has a large and growing industry for its domestic market, which however, is even more limited by its poverty than India. At present it is a tariff sheltered market for Chinese mills—most of which are in Japanese and some in British hands. In China, as in India, expansion of domestic manufacturing has hit Britain and Japan.

In France, mills seem to have it all their own way. They have a protected home market and an exclusive colonial market. Yet the export mills have been hard hit lately by economic nationalism everywhere. So far, France has been able to save her export trade by developing her colonial outlets.

Protected Markets

Totalitarian Germany and Italy have their protected domestic markets, too, and in many foreign markets they enjoy substantial advantages. But in some of these, as in Latin America and the Balkans, nationalist movements to establish national industries are being pursued at the expense of German and Italian exports. At the same time, National Socialism, in particular, has been hampered by the difficulty of obtaining adequate supplies of raw materials at a reasonable cost—a difficulty mainly due to its own foreign exchange restrictions.

In both Germany and Italy, imports of raw materials have been restricted and efforts made to develop synthetic fibers—while the very bilateral agreements which have opened up export markets for finished textiles often necessitate the purchase of raw materials, usually of inferior grades, at prices substantially above world market quotations.

Advantages Offset

I. L. O. experts do not deny that protective tariffs and quotas have given some countries special advantages in the international textile trade. But such advantages, they point out, have been offset "in whole or in part" by other factors in international competition, such as comparative currency devaluation, commercial organization, capital charges machine efficiency and labor costs.

"From the economic as well as from the social point of view," experts declare, "the problem is the same: international cooperation is required in a common program which will promote the orderly development of the textile industry in different countries and secure decent living standards for the workers of the industry."

The purpose of the coming Washington textile conference, composed of government, employer and worker representatives, will be to lay the foundations of this common program.

JINDO KAI DANCE

Preparations for the Jindokai dance which is to be held at the Shimbashi Dance Hall starting at 7 p.m. Friday are almost complete. The Shimbashi Dance Hall has been hired for the occasion exclusive of dancers. Two excellent orchestras will provide the music.

The Jindo Kai, or Japan Humane Society, has been working on the following projects but funds are necessary to carry on their work during this year. The Society has now more than 2,000 members in its Children's League and desired to expand widely along educational lines this year. The Society speaker visited 49 schools and kindergartens this year. It organizes a Kindness-to-Animals week every year in May and a World-Day-for-Animals in October. It has also made arrangements with six hospitals to receive and dispose of stray animals humanely, and pays the expenses. Also the Society now has 19 horse troughs in operation with a constant supply of running water during the hot season.

The patrons and patronesses at the Jindo Kai Dance will be the Belgian Ambassador and Baroness de Bassompierre, the British Ambassador and Lady Clive, the American Ambassador and Mrs. Grew, the French Ambassador and Mrs. Arsene Henry, the Soviet Ambassador and Mrs. Youreneff, the German Ambassador and Mrs. von Dirksen, the Brazilian Ambassador and Mrs. Velloso and the Canadian Minister and Mrs. Bruce.

Orange Growers Are to Put Fruit To an X-Ray Test

Christian Science Monitor

ANAHEIM, California.—This year many California orange growers can say to their consumers, "We know our oranges are good: we have looked inside of them and know what is there."

This novel pledge of quality is made possible through the development of the X-ray for examination of the orange. While not all packing houses have made arrangements to install this device, many will approach the marketing season equipped to take a peek into every orange their members produce.

The process is slow and costly, but the growers feel it is worth the price. They want to insure buyers against frosted and crystallized fruit. This year the method will be particularly valuable because of heavy damage sustained by the fruit in the January freezes.

In past years it has been impossible to grade out all damaged fruit. It colors up well and has the appearance of being juicy and toothsome. When opened, it may be found to contain nothing but a mass of dry pulp. Efforts to "float" the damaged fruit out have not been satisfactory. This plan work upon the theory that damaged fruit will be lighter than the undamaged, which is not always true.

Eighteen months of intensive development of an idea submitted by the California Fruit Growers' Exchange to the General Electric Company has brought forth a machine declared to be entirely effective.

There is nothing mysterious about the device. A powerful X-ray tube, utilizing 80,000 to 101,000 volts, projects upon a fluoroscope screen a shadow of the fruit as it passes on a conveyor belt. Two operators attend the machine, one standing at either side, thus enabling the costly X-ray tube to do double duty. This tube costs $150 and is expected to have a useful life of 1500 hours.

Defective fruit casts a light shadow upon the screen; it is shoved off the belt by use of a hand-operated "kicker" lever. Good fruit throws a heavy shadow and is permitted to continue along the belt.

The entire machine is encased in lead sheathing one fourth inch thick to protect the operators. Glass through which they peer is composed of 57 per cent lead.

Tests have revealed that the machine operated to capacity will handle 700 packed boxes of fruit in eight hours. One cooperative packing house here is installing four of the devices and expects to have them in readiness for the opening of the Valencia orange season April 15.

A Cinema Taboo

The whole world is Hollywood's "location," when studios want authentic backgrounds, but film companies have an unwritten regard for the sanctity of churches. Rarely do stars and extras, lights and cameras bag and baggage invade a religious edifice to transform it into a movie set.

This gesture of respect costs the studios untold thousands annually in building big church sets when they could rent real churches for purposes of filming.

This was evidenced recently in the "tabernacle" Columbia Studios built for "Racketeers In Exile." Completed at enormous cost, the set covers nearly an acre. Its auditorium seats 1200, and includes a rostrum, choir loft, pipe organ and public address system.

"Downstairs" are the church offices and other quarters. The humane features of modern religious activities are seen in the basement, where great stores of food and clothing are piled on shelves, ready to be given to the needy.

All this expense was necessary for tabernacle scenes with George Bancroft, Wynne Gibson, Evelyn Venable and hundreds of extras in attendance. Within a half mile radius of the studio are several real churches which could have well served the purpose, but when Hollywood needs a church for the screen, it is built.

Chaplin Studios Wired For Sound

Hollywood news hawks, and there are 500 of them, got a meaty item for their note books the other day. The Chaplin Studios are being wired for sound recording!

And now filmdom is looking forward with considerable anticipation to the new picture Charlie Chaplin is preparing to launch with Paulette Goddard as the star and a surrounding cast of the finest available talent.

As yet without a title—tentatively called "Production No. 6"—it will not only be the comedian-producer's first attempt at a talkie, but the second picture he will make in which he does not appear.

Chaplin refuses to give out any information on his latest production, merely announcing that it will be a comedy-drama with colorful Shanghai, Honolulu and other foreign locales as backgrounds.

The Chaplin Studios announced that in addition to the new recording equipment they will have the most expert technicians, the latest in cameras and last, but not least, the personal supervision and direction of Chaplin himself.

It will elevate to front rank stardom Miss Goddard, whose first important film appearance as Chaplin's leading lady in "Modern Times" was more than favorably received by critics, exhibitors and movie fans everywhere. Already the studio has had to engage a secretary to answer Miss Goddard's constantly increasing mail.

Speaking of Charlie Chaplin, the comedian is to have the honor of having a London street named after after him.

The street in question is part of a new housing estate which stands on the site of the day school at Hanwell which Charlie and his brother Sydney attended more than 30 years ago. Appropriately enough, estate is known as the Cuckoo Estate!

Frank Capra Says...

Actors should never be allowed to choose the parts they play, according to Frank Capra, Hollywood's ace director, who finished work on his most ambitious picture, "Lost Horizon", starring Ronald Colman, which is being released here today at Hibiya Gekijo.

"When an actor reads a script," says Capra, "he quite naturally centers his attention upon his own character. Many of them read only their own lines. They don't look at the story as a whole and, as the result, cannot visualize the completed picture on the screen.

"There are actors, too, who place too much stress upon the length of their parts. Many pictures are stolen by players who are seen but briefly on the screen.

"If I were an actor, I would have someone whose judgment I trusted pass upon the parts I would play. It would be someone who could visualize the character in the complete story and who would have a better perspective that I undoubtedly would possess as a man interested only in an individual part.

"There have been many instances in Hollywood where my theory has been proven by practical application. Stars have had clauses written into their contracts giving them absolute judgment on the stories and characters they would appear in. And, their decisions have resulted in monumental and disastrous motion picture flops."

It's Okay

with exaggerated inflections of voice and much arm-waving, while Normie sits politely and watches. When I finish, I bow and he applauds; then he gets up and goes up and goes through the whole routine exactly as I did it, after which he bows and I applaud. This goes until unconscious—so I think it's pretty certain that Norman has a natural bent for acting.

"However," Joan concludes, "since he's only two, he's too young yet to receive any training that will fit him for a stage career. He'll get it later, if he wants it. All I can do, I guess, is to sit back, anyway, and let nature take its course."

That, also, is the attitude of Frank McHugh, concerning his son, Michael Spencer McHugh, who is about the same age as Joan's son Norman. The adopted daughter, Mavourneen, of the Pat O'Briens, also will receive assistance at a later date.

"We have no intention of deliberately making her an actress," says Mrs. O'Brien, "but we wouldn't try to stop her, and would help if that's her wish. She's only two years old now, but when she's four her dancing lessons will begin. For no matter what they're going to be when they are grown, I think all children should have dancing lessons. Later, if she has any voice at all, she'll study singing."

Most enthusiastic at the prospect that their children may be actors are Donald and Mrs. Woods, and Edward G. and Gladys Robinson.

"Our 'Splinter' is not quite four yet," says Mrs. Woods, "but already he gets dancing and singing lessons at the nursery school. Yes, indeed, if he wants to be an actor, I'll be very happy."

"First of all, Manny is going to school, with other boys and girls," Mrs. Robinson chimes in. "Then he'll have every opportunity to go on the stage, and all the training necessary to that end. Already I have the thrill of knowing that my daughter, who is nineteen now, is going to be an opera singer. She has studied for several years, has a beautiful mezzo-soprano voice, and is almost ready for her debut.

"So all I ask is that Manny be an actor. And if he can be half as good an actor as I think his father is, I'll be more than satisfied!"

MANUEL L. QUEZON, President of the Philippines—The leadership of Dr. Butler in education as well as in the promotion of world peace has been universally recognized. Because of his powerful mind, the force of his character and his achievements in the educational field, his is a personality that no longer belongs to America alone but to the world.

LEON BLUM, Prime Minister of France—I am happy on the occasion of the thirty-fifth anniversary of your presidency of Columbia University to add my felicitations to those which you have received from the entire world. France, devoted to liberty, salutes in Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University and president of the Carnegie Endowment, one of the organizers of universal peace.

LORD TWEEDSMUIR, Governor General of Canada—Few men have ever served more fully their day and generation—a service which I hope is by no means exhausted. Dr. Butler has been one of the greatest academic figures of our time, a great citizen of the United States and a great citizen of the world.

W. L. MACKENZIE KING, Prime Minister of Canada—As one who has enjoyed the friendship of Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler for a third of a century, I join with his friends and admirers in all parts of the world in extending to him heartiest congratulations and best wishes upon the anniversaries which he is celebrating.

DR. MILAN HODZA, Prime Minister of Czechoslovakia—International contact between intellectual leaders and their spiritual work is today more important than ever before, because the present grave moral crisis of nations is largely the product of the destruction of of the balance between the realm of intellect and the realm of emotions. Dr. Butler's example is worthy of following, for it is needful to expound indefatigably Rationem Contra Utopiam.

EARLE PAGE, Acting Prime Minister of Australia—In extending birthday greetings to Dr. Butler on behalf of the Government and the people of the Commonwealth of Australia, I would express the sincere hope he may long be spared to continue his very capable work.

COUNT SFORZA, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs—Wishing for freedom and culture another long term of yours.

NAOTAKE SATO, Japanese Minister of Foreign Affairs—With great pleasure I send greeting upon the occasion of Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler's seventy-fifth birthday anniversary. His attainments and works are known around the world and his labors and success in the cause of peace and advancement of human welfare are a subject for admiration.

DR. WANG CHUNG-HUI, Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs—Dr. Butler, I wish to join your host of friends in sending you greetings and congratulations. You have been a father to hundreds of our students who have received their college diplomas from your hands and returned to their homeland with American ideas and American methods, thus strengthening the ties between China and America.

PRINCE EUGENE DE LIGNE, Belgium Charge d'Affaires—Paul Van Zeeland, Prime Minister of Belgium, instructs me to convey to you his most hearty greetings and best wishes on the occasion of the anniversary of your birth, which also marks the rounding out of thirty-five years of distinguished service in the domain of education as president of Columbia University.

VISCOUNT CECIL OF CHELWOOD, chancellor of Birmingham University, England—May I offer warmest congratulations on triple anniversary both as personal friend and as co-worker for peace. May your much needed labors for that supreme cause be long continued and successful.

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, former Prime Minister of Great Britain—Delighted to associate myself with Dr. Butler's innumerable friends in felicitating that well-known champion of peace and international good-will on completing seventy-five years of active and beneficent service.

Other messages from Great Britain were received from Lord Derby, Harold A. Wilson, vice chancellor of the University of Cambridge; Sir Thomas Henry Holland, vice chancellor of the University of Edinburgh; Lord Queenborough and the Earl and Countess of Denbigh.

Appeal Is Made For Deeper US-Mexico Accord

Christian Science Monitor

MEXICO, D. F.—An appeal for a deeper understanding between the United States and Mexico, based upon study of facts, was made by Ambassador Josephus Daniels, when he received American students attending the winter seminar at the University of Mexico. In his talk, he disapproved of sensational magazine articles about Mexico which have been published in North American papers and magazines.

"Understanding," he said, "between the two Republics separated by the narrow Rio Grande has suffered because fly-by-night observers with preconceived opinions have returned to their homes after short visits to write papers and books in support of views not based on full knowledge of people or affairs.

"Most of these half-baked stories by tourists are based largely upon bias or upon misleading information imparted by those upon whom they rely in their journeys. Some Mexicans likewise go to the United States and come in contact with its ugly side only, and return without knowing its beauty and the fine spirit of most of its people. Likewise some Americans come here and go home to write that Mexico is all lovely and fair, a sort of Utopia. Others, talking only with pessimists, reach the conclusion that Mexico is headed for revolution by Communists or gold shirt Fascists. Both of these pictures convey the wrong impression. Mexico is no Utopia and neither is there such a country in this drifting world."

Madero as Emancipator

Discussing Mexico's past eras of feudalism and revolution, Ambassador Daniels referred to Madero as a patriot who was assassinated just as his program for emancipation was launched. He observed that wages for the bulk of the population in the feudal era were below any proper standard of living, and that illiteracy was then the greatest curse of the nation. Continuing, he said:

"Today the condition of the mass of Mexicans is better than at any time in the history of the country, though its leaders recognize that there are many bridges to cross before the heights of the desired standards of living and of social justice are reached.

"When Madero came into office (in 1911), 85 per cent of the population was illiterate, and ownership of the land by those who till the soil was practically negligible, while compensation of laborers was little above starvation level. The story of this last quarter of a century in Mexico has been the story of a people resolved to build upon broader foundations. Illiteracy has been reduced to less than 60 per cent, and the increased number of schools for Indians in their ancient tongues—many have never adopted the Spanish language—promises a steady decrease of illiteracy.

"Mexico of the present is a land of developing industries and of an awakening people, a Mexico of experiments, of new ideas, of a search for means to disseminate education and social security. The journals of the earlier discoverers of Mexico are finished volumes. The journals of the present-day discoverers of Mexico are being written by your students and by many others who daily cross the border to see the march of progress in this country.

"These journals will carry the record of the rebirth of a great indigenous nation. They will forecast the Mexico of the future. In the decades to come, they will be searched by students seeking knowledge of the origins of the new Republic of Mexico, tracing the unfolding of democratic institutions, the laborious progress of social justice, the improvement of knowledge and public welfare throughout this rich and beautiful country, and the development of policies necessary for the highest intellectual, moral and spiritual life of the people."

Republics in Agreement

With relation to present Mexican-American relations, Ambassador Daniels said that the year's highlight was reached at the recent Buenos Aires Conference, where both countries cooperated for the furtherance of peace and security on this hemisphere.

"Perfect and harmonious cooperation between the delegates from Mexico and the United States existed at Buenos Aires," he said. "It is a matter of gratification that the representatives of the two most northern Republics saw eye to eye in the plans presented and the actions taken for the peace and prosperity of all the people and countries of the New World."

In conclusion, the Ambassador counseled the students, upon their return to home, to convey the true picture of conditions in Mexico as they were seen. "Mexican leaders are the last people who would wish you to paint a picture of perfection," he said.

G.M. 1936 Sales Volume Is Third Best In History

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK.—Revealing a record high in the number of motorcars sold, the annual report of General Motors Corporation shows total sales for 1936 of $1,439,289,940, the third highest in its history, and a gain of 25 per cent over the $1,155,641,511 total of the year before. The aggregate compares with sales volume of $1,504,404,472 in 1929 and with $1,459,762,906 in 1928.

Net earnings last year were $238,182,426, equal after charges, reserves, taxes, including $2,395,283 surtax on undistributed profits, and preferred dividends, to $5.35 a share on 42,872,394 common shares, compared with net of $167,226,510, or $3.69 a share on the common in 1935. Last year's profit was surpassed only in 1928 and 1929, when net earnings were shown to be $276,468,108 and $248,282,268 respectively.

The corporation sold 2,037,690 passenger cars and trucks in 1936, a new record for all time, exceeding by 7.3 per cent the previous high record of 1,899,267 units sold in 1929. Sale of other products, particularly Frigidaire, likewise showed important gains, and nearly all established new sales records.

Got 43 Per Cent of the Business

Reporting on the year's business, Lammot du Pont, chairman, and Alfred P. Sloan Jr., president, said:

"During 1936 the corporation accounted for 41.6 per cent of the new motorcars and trucks sold to consumers within the United States, as measured by registration, and approximately 37 per cent of those sold throughout the world. Comparatively considered, there are new records of accomplishment.

"The competitive strength of the corporation's 1937 products is indicated by the fact that 43.4 per cent of the new passenger cars and trucks sold to consumers in the United States during the month of December were General Motors cars."

"At this writing, notwithstanding the fact that the manufacturing facilities of the corporation are taxed to the utmost, and in all probability sales will be lost during the year 1937 due to inability to meet the demands, no important expansion, on a broad basis, is contemplated."

$202,081,519 Dividends Total

Preferred and common dividends paid totaled $202,081,519, comparing with $105,654,969 in 1935, a new all-time record. There was retained in the business an amount of $36,400,906, or 85 cents a share.

General Motors Corporation or its predecessor company have reported net sales in the period 1909 to 1936 of $16,535,823,333, and have had $3,296,527,413 available for dividends. Of this amount, 76.62 per cent has been paid to stockholders, and $621,480,037 has been reinvested in the business. Dividends exceeded earnings only in the years 1921, 1921 and 1932.

Taxes accrued or paid by the corporation and subsidiaries within the United States last year were $91,150,000, comparing with $63,160,000 for 1935. This amount is equivalent to $2.13 per share of common stock, compared with $1.47 a share for 1935. Based on the average number of employes, it was equal to $440 per employe, against $334 for 1935. For each dollar of pay roll the tax bill was 25 cents, against 21 cents in 1935.

Pay Rolls Second Highest

The following table shows the number of individuals within each salary group shown, receiving $5000 and over, as of December 31, 1936:

Salary Group	Number of Individuals
$100,000 and over (none over $150,000)	2
80,000 to 99,999	1
70,000 to 79,999	8
60,000 to 69,999	1
50,000 to 59,999	8
40,000 to 49,000	4
30,000 to 39,999	9
20,000 to 29,999	42
15,000 to 19,999	67
10,000 to 14,999	173
5,000 to 9,999	1363
Total receiving salaries of $5,000 and over	1678

The cost of executive administration on the basis of salary proper amounted to 21 cents per $1000 of sales. Bonus compensation amounted to 43 cents per $100 of sales. The total of 64 cents compares with 60 cents in 1935.

Salaries and wages paid in 1936 were $384,153,022, with the average number employed 230,572. This included $9,165,554 appreciation fund distributions. In 1935, pay rolls were $327,677,624, with 211,712 average number of employes, and includes $4,647,025 appreciation fund distributions. Pay rolls were the highest on record except for 1929, when they were $389,517,783, with an average of 233,286 employed.

Working Capital Gains

Net working capital at the year end was $339,686,551, a gain of $19,725,332 for the year. Cash, U. S. Government and other marketable securities were $195,659,172, against $199,435,663, inventories were $225,644,813, compared wth $196,325,118, and current assets were $513,986,449, against $465,028,108, while current liabilities were $174,299,898, against $145,066,889.

Expenditures for plant in 1936, exclusive of special tools, amounted to $66,793,767, and were partly offset by the disposal of certain properties and transfers between active and idle plant account during the year. Gross plant account also was increased $41,389,478 by the consolidation of certain other additions, subtractions and applications of retirement reserves, there was a gain of $69,033,812 in net plant account.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

The "Wallis" of the 17th Century

Richard Cromwell (1626-1712) became sovereign of England as its Lord Protector on September 3, 1658 after the death of his father the Great Oliver Cromwell. He is described by a contemporary authority as "amiable and popular but weak, devoted to sports and fond of pleasure". He was compelled to abdicate on May 25, 1659 after a rule of 8½ months. He subsequently went to France where he lived in retirement under the assumed name of Wallis (according to John H. Jesse, Court of England during the Reign of the Stuarts, vol. 4 page 106).

Britain Is Most Popular

land, would have led the list of our European friends if a nation-wide survey had been possible in those early years.

By 1863, however, the British attitude toward the war between the states made England popular in the South, unpopular in the North. The North meanwhile experienced a wave of friendship for czarist Russia, which sent a goodwill fleet to Northern ports during the war. Later, capping the evidence of goodwill, the United States negotiated the Alaska purchase with the Czar.

Friends—Not Allies

The World War aligned the United States actively with both England and France in world affairs for the first time. After peace was accomplished, however, the United States illustrated its old tradition of aloofness.

Thespian

The class in public speaking was to give pantomimes that afternoon.

One freshman got up when called on, went to the platform and stood perfectly still.

"Well," said the Professor after a minute's wait for something to happen. "What do you represent?"

"I'm imitating a man going up in an elevator," was the quick response. —Grit (Sydney, Australia).

23 Nations Seeking Big Economic Deals

By CHARLES W. HURD

N. Y. Times

LONDON, April 5—A new effort to realize effective international cooperation in the control of sugar production, which, it is hoped by many governments, may point the way toward a broad field of negotiations looking to the insurance of world peace and economic stability, began today.

Delegates from twenty-three nations, including Norman Davis, formerly America's principal spokesman at the disarmament and naval conferences, met formally twice, first at the opening, formal session in the historic Locarno Room of the Foreign Office, and tonight at an official banquet.

Ramsay MacDonald, Lord President of the Council of Britain, presided at these gatherings, between which the conference met late in the afternoon for the first of a three week's series of private meetings, at which statesmen of the leading powers are expected to discuss not only sugar but the conditions of many basic commodities, distributed by restriction of production along with the rearing of excessive tariff barriers.

U. S. Takes Broader View

While the sugar question itself agitates most of Europe, and many countries, including Britain, have expended great sums to encourage uneconomic production in an effort to certify national security, the principal interest of the United States lies in a renewed experiment for international cooperation—America's sugar supply being well secured.

Behind the conference lies the virtualy universal hope—one shared alike by democracies and dictatorship countries—that some formula may be devised that may free for productive use the large sums expended for maintenance of the "economic defenses" of the powers dependant on foreign supplies.

Sugar production and distribution offer a test as important to European countries and one far more crucial because of national fears, as maintenance by the United States of supplies of tin and rubber from foreign sources.

In his opening speech before the delegates Mr. MacDonald suggested the posibility of group agreements on commodity control, with an agreement "on the part of all countries that, if and when prices on the free market rise to an economic level, they will do what is possible to adjust protective duties, subsidies, etc., so as to prevent their internal prices from rising to a point which would check consumption and stimulate new production and thus defeat the object for which we are working."

Davis Gives U.S. Position

Only the opening session was held in the formal atmosphere of the Locarno Room, where about 100 delegates wearing black coats gathered in the vaulted room from whose soiled buff walls looks down a regal portrait of the late George V. The afternoon session was held at Burlington House. Mr. Davis did not speak at the public session, but he outlined the United States position briefly at the opening of the private business session.

He amply confirmed the United States interest in the sugar conference tonight when he responded at the banquet to Mr. MacDonald's toast to "our guests." Mr. Davis said:

"I think that if we could only reach one agreement, such as on sugar, it would be important in this crucial period of world history to democracy as showing that twenty-three nations can sit down and reach some agreement that will help world economy and promote peace."

Mr. Davis made no effort to confine his interests to sugar alone, although he remarked tonight with a smile, "I have been on many missions, but this is the sweetest one I have ever had."

France for Wider Plan

Indications that other major powers, in addition to Great Britain and the United States, look on the present conference as a forum for a general conference came from Paris tonight. It was authoritatively reported France was only slightly interested in sugar agreements as such, but hoped that Charles Spinasse, Minister of National Economy and head of the French delegation, would find an opportunity to discuss with Mr. Davis the wider problem of economic cooperation between France and the United States in further cooperation with Britain.

The French were also reported gratified that the sugar conferees included Dr. Colijn, whose views against excessive trade barriers are well known and are expected to carry considerable weight in the international discussion.

It is understood on good authority that Mr. Spinasse has the authority of his government to go far beyond the technical discussion of sugar and inquire whether the United States and Britain think the time ripe to reopen the discussions that brought about the tripartite monetary agreement, with a view to approaching the goal of freer trade.

Obviously, should Mr. Spinasse and Mr. Davis reach informal understandings that would be reflected in their governments' relaxing trade strictures, Britain would be the first to take steps looking to becoming a partner in such activities for her own sake as well as for carrying forward the announced British policy of lessening trade barriers.

Mr. Spinasse also reported he was ready to discuss informally with Mr. Davis the problem of "hot money" that is vexing the United States, since France is said to be as interested as the United States in restricting the flow of speculative capital.

Fish Against Paying Too Much For Gold

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

WASHINGTON, April 28—Representative Hamilton Fish of New York today presented a resolution in the House under which the Treasury will be prohibited from buying foreign gold at a price more than $25 an ounce.

Meanwhile, reports from New York received here today, revealed that a $21,603,000 gold shipment arrived from England, the largest engagement from any country this year. The total amount from England since September 26 last year amounts to $483,000,000, it was added.

Strato-Chamber Tests By Russian Meet Success

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

MOSCOW, April 29—Tests on a hermetically sealed strato-chamber for use in airplanes flying through the stratosphere, which was designed by a Soviet engineer Scherbakov, were successfully carried out here yesterday, it was announced today.

A laboratory assistant who carried out the experiment flew more than ten minutes at an altitude of 10,100 meters in a strato-chamber equipped plane without the use either of a heavy suit of clothing or an oxygen respirator. Although the temperature outside registered 55 degrees below zero and that of the strato-chamber did not drop below the seven-degree above zero mark, he suffered no ill effects, it was announced.

The strato-chamber is installed in the rear part of the ship.

Escalators Are Adopted For New U.S. Buildings

WASHINGTON — Escalators will be used in a government building for the first time when the new Interior Building is opened.

Future government buildings probably will make increasing use of the escalator. Since awarding of the contract for the Interior Building, escalators have been specified for the Los Angeles Postoffice-Courthouse.

Four escalators, two in each direction, have been installed in the Washington structure. The two main entrances of the Interior Building are on separate levels because of the contour of the land.

Twenty high-speed elevators and stairways in smoke-proof wells running the height of the building with the escalators, could empty the building of its ultimate population of 5,000 Federal employes rapidly in an emergency.

Women In Japan Take Active Part In Organizations

Aikoku-Fujinkai And Kokubo Fujinkai Vie For Members

There are hundreds of women's organizations in Japan. These may be mainly divided into five groups namely:

(1) Organizations for the defense of the fatherland.

(2) Organizations for the advancement of mental culture.

(3) Organizations for the acquisition of franchise.

(4) Religious organizations for social works.

(5) Women associations arranged according to occupations.

Of these (1) and (2) mostly belong to government organizations while (3) (4) and (5) mostly to independent organizations.

The Aikoku-fujinkai and the Dai-nippon-kokubo-fujinkai are organizations for the defense of the fatherland. The Aikoku-fujinkai was organized in 1901 while the Kokubo-fujinkai was organized in 1934. These two bodies are nearly of the same power and show the same activities.

The Aikoku-fujinkai was formed by Madame Ihoko Okumura, the heroine of the Meiji era, and was brought up by Madame Utako Shimoda who died last year. Madame Hisako Motono is the present president, and it has 2,480,000 members.

Originally, this group was organized with the object of assisting the military work, such as to welcome and send-off the soldiers at the front or to console the families of the people who died in battles. A white sash is the sign of membership.

It was immediately after the Manchurian incident that the Dai-nippon-kokubo-fujinkai was organized. This group was first organized in Osaka, and many other groups came out in succession throughout the country, and at present the head office of these groups is in the War Office. The object of this group is to offer services in the defense of the country. The members use white aprons as a sign of membership.

The Aikoku-fujinkai and the Kokubo-fujinkai are the two powerful women organizations which are competing with each other in acquisition of members. Recently, the Aikoku-fujinkai succeeded in taking in the waitresses of Ginza as the members. Immediately after, the Kokubo-fujinkai took an opposing step, and took in the waitresses of Shinjiku as its members.

The Kokubo-fujinkai has made rapid progress within four years since its formation and at present it has 3,520,000 members.

Madame Hisako Motono, the president of the Aikoku-fujinkai is the wife of the late Viscount Ichiro Motono, and Madame Masuko Mizuno, the vice-president, is the wife of His Excellency Rentaro Mizuno the former Minister of Education. Most of the directors of this association are the wives of the nobles or members of the House of Peers. The wives of the prefectural governors are the heads of the branch offices of the prefectural association.

Madame Nobuko, the wife of late field-Marshal Nobuyoshi Muto, the general, who rendered distinguished services at the time of the Manchurian incident is the President of the Kokubo-fujinkai, and the wives of the ministers of the Army and Navy are acting as vice-presidents, and the wives of the regimental commanders are acting as the heads of local branch offices. If we compare the officers of these two leading organizations we can distinctly see the phases of the times.

The Young and the Domestic Women

At present, there are many Joshi-seinendan (young women's associations) organized throughout the whole country. The object of this association is to promote friendly relations among the members, and at the same time to contrive for the progress and advancement of the members. That is why, its chief work is to open the kosukai (a short course) or to plan for the trip of inspection.

In 1927 all the young women's associations at each of the prefectures were first of all unified into a group, and finally all of these prefectural groups were unified into a larger group under the name of the Dai-nippon-rengo-joshi-seinendan (the federation of the young women's associations of Japan).

The late Madame Fusako Yamawaki is the founder of this association.

At present, this association has 1,560,000 members. The Department of Education and the Educational department of the Social Welfare Bureau are managing the affairs of this association.

In 1930, the Dainippon-rengo-fujinkai was organized. This is the sister association of the Joshi-seinendan. The members of the Joshi-seinendan are unmarried, while those of the Rengo-fujinkai are married women. At present, Rengo-fujinkai has some ten million members. This is the largest women group in Japan. This is also under the management of the Department of Education and the Education section of the Social Welfare Bureau.

The Champions of Women Suffrage

It was in the year 1911 that a group of graduates of the Nippon Women's University raised a voice for woman suffrage for the first time in Japan. Madame Raicho Hiratsuka was the leader of this group. The so-called Seitosha is the name given to this group, and it continued to show its activities until 1916, when it naturally came to a state of dissolution.

It was Madame Fusae Ichikawa who went over to America where she studied the women's movement in the U.S.A. and who with great difficulty formed the Fusen-kakutoku-domei (the union for the acquisition of women suffrage) in 1924.

The Nihon-kirisutokyo-fujinsansei-ken-kyokai, the Fujinsansei-domei, the Shakai-taishu-fujindomei, the Fujin-doshikai are the different groups which were organized for the purpose of obtaining women suffrage.

Of all these five groups the Fusen-kakutoku-domei has shown the most remarkable activities. It has shown activities not only in politics, but also in social and economic movement from the stand point of the home women.

Taki Fujita of Tokyo, Kotoe Kodama of Higashinakano, Tai Kurobe of Kyoto, Hisako Yoneyama of Kanazawa, Shizuko Komai, a factory owner, Haru Wazaki of Akita prefecture are the chief leaders of this group.

Religious Organizations

The women's religious organizations many be divided into two groups. One is the Christian group and other group belongs to the line of Buddhism. The former group is showing greater activities than the latter group. Organizations like the Nihon-kirisutokyo-fujinkyofukai (the Women's Christian Temperance Union), the Fujin-heiwa-kyokai (the women's peace society) the Young Women's Christian Association, the Futaba-holkuen may be called the Christian organizations. There are, no doubt, some organizations which belong to the line of Buddhism, but these are not showing much activities.

Of all the Christian organizations the Women's Christian Temperance Union is too well known to the world for its purification campaign.

The Nihon-kiristokyo-fujinkyofukai was organized in 1886 by the late Kajiko Yajima. The mottoes of this organization are peace, purity and temperance. She is said to be the first originator of women's movement in Japan.

For the space of half a century there were more or less ups and downs, but this movement is still on the road to prosperity.

The present president is Madame Chiyoko Ozaki the Principal of the Aoyama Jogakuin, and Madame Utako Hayashi and Madame Tsuneko Gauntlett are the vice-presidents. Madame Ochimi Kubushiro is in charge of the affairs of the society. Madame Azuma Moriya is the accountant, and Madame Michiko Sembongi is the chief editor of the magazine.

In reality, Tsuneko Gauntlett, Azuma Moriya, Ochimi Kubushiro are the women who are actually taking part in the movement of this organization. Madame Gauntlett is the wife of Edward Gauntlett a lecturer of the Tokyo Commercial University. For many years she lived in foreign countries, and it is said that she is better in English than in Japanese.

Madame Azuma Moriya is the favorite disciple of late Madame Yajima and is endeavoring for the education of the poor. She is the vice-chairman of the Tokyo-rengo-fujinkai.

It is said that Madame Ochimi Kubushiro had once learned English from Madame Gauntlett at the mission school in Maebashi (Gumma Prefecture).

These three star social workers are working hand in hand for the works of this organization. Madame Kubushiro is endeavoring for the purification movement, Madame Moriya for the temperance movement, and Madame Gauntlett for the peace movement.

The young women's association of Buddhism is the only organization which is worth while mentioning from the line of Buddhism.

Professional Women's Organizations

The lady doctors' association of of Japan (Nihon-joikai)

There are about 3,400 lady doctors in Japan. These are the members. Of these, 2,000 are the graduates of the Tokyo-joshi-isen (a college for lady doctors). Madame Yayoi Yoshioka is the president of this association.

The volunteer Nurses' Society of the Nippon Red Cross Nurse is attracting the eyes of the populace, since the time of the Sino-Japanese and Russo-Japanese wars. Madame Yasuko Tokugawa is the president of this society.

Nowadays lady teachers began to realize the necessity of unity. In Japan, there is an all elementary lady teachers' association which was organized in 1924 under the auspices of the Imperial Educational Association. In the beginning it was difficult for the association to gather members, but nowadays many teachers are willing to join the association.

In 1931, the Middle School Lady Teachers' Association was organized, but it has not yet shown any activities.

The Oinkai is an association formed by the graduates of the women's higher normal school.

Against this association, there is the Ofukai which is formed by the graduates of the Nippon women's university in Mejiro. It seems that the Oinkai and the Ofukai are inwardly competing with each other.

Notables Attend Tea Ceremony

The tea ceremony which was given by members of the Tsubomikai in the tea room of the Gokokuji Temple, Koishikawa, Tokyo, on April 22 on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the establishment of the society under the presidency of Mrs. Umeko Horikoshi, founder of the society.

The Stamps Of Vatican City

By COLLECTOR

The recent serious illness of Pope Pius XI has attracted the attention of the entire world, and a glance at some of the postal issues of Vatican City may well be of timely interest.

It was the bold and able diplomacy of the present Pope that in 1929 restored to the Vatican its ancient status as an independent political state and, incidentally, gave it the privilege of issuing its own postage stamps as distinguished from those of the Kingdom of Italy.

Vatican City is only one-half square mile in area, and probably has the distinction of being the smallest stamp-issuing government in the world.

The 5c value shows the papal arms surmounted by the keys of St. Peter and the famous triple tiara which symbolizes the three-fold sovereignty of the Pope—spiritual, temporal, and purgatorial.

The 10c stamp bears a picture of the Vatican Palace, where His Holiness receives the hundreds of visitors who every day come to do him honor. The pomp and ceremony of the Papal Court is unsurpassed for sheer magnificence by any of the royal courts of Europe. The traditional rich lace and purple vestments of the cardinals, the jewelled mitres of the bishops, the blazing orders of the Roman nobility and the picturesque red, blue, and yellow uniforms of the Papal Guards, that were designed four centuries ago by Michelangelo, all create an unusual and impressive atmosphere.

The Vatican takes its name from one of the seven hills of ancient Rome, and is situated on the west bank of the Tiber. An airplane view of the entire city, surrounded by the Leonine Walls, appears on the 21 stamp. Besides the Vatican Palace, it contains the great Vatican Library, with its priceless historical documents and ancient manuscripts, museums, galleries, an observatory and the famous Sistine Chapel.

All of the buildings are dominated by the tremendous dome of St. Peter's Cathedral, which is shown in a nearer view on the 5 L stamp. This church was erected in the 16th century by Bramate and Michelangelo, but the original basilica goes back to the first century of the Christian era. It is said to stand upon the same rock upon which St. Peter suffered martyrdom. The dome of St. Peter's Cathedral also appears in the background of the 50c stamp, showing the Vatican Gardens where the Pope used to walk every afternoon before his recent illness.

Achille Ratti, whose picture appears on the 1 L stamp, and known to the world now as Pope Pius XI, was born of a middle-class Italian family in 1857. He first distinguished himself in the church by his scholarship and his exceptional diplomatic ability. In 1911 he became Prefect of the Vatican Library and in 1920 he received the red hat of a cardinal. Two years later when he was elected Pope he set about restoring the prestige of the Vatican, which had been badly shaken during the World War.

Perhaps the most important of the Pope's achievements was the successful termination of the Lateran Treaty of 1929 by which the long breach between the Holy See and the Italian Government was finally closed. Pope Pius has shown a great interest in social affairs.

A tireless worker in the cause of universal peace, the Pope is usually at his desk at six o'clock in the morning, and until his recent illness, has been extremely vigorous.

If you have read of the adventures of Shinbad the Sailor in the Arabian Nights, you will doubtless recollect how once the island of Serandib, he was seized by a gigantic bird and carried to a valley filled with diamonds. This island, known today as Madagascar, lies off the southeast coast of Africa. It is one of the largest islands in the world, nearly 1000 miles long and 250 wide.

Unfortunately, the location of the jewelled valley has never been found by anyone in Madagascar. The natural wealth is very scant, and the climate is considered unhealthy for Europeans, and for this reason, although the island is owned by the French, there has been little colonization there by French people.

The wealth of the island constitutes the chief wealth of the people. A man's standing in the community is reckoned by the number of cattle he owns. Appropriately enough, the I C stamps now issued in this island show a man with his yoke of oxen.

An eccentric-looking stamp, resembling a baggage label, was recently issued by Brazil in commemoration of the International Esperanto Congress which met in Rio de Janeiro at the close of last year.

The value is 300 R and the color light green. The central design shows the flags of nations represented at the Congress and the surrounding inscription is in Esperanto. This artificial language, designed to be universal throughout the world, was invented by Dr. L. L. Zamenhof in 1887.

Esperanto is a schoolboy's dream of a language. It is claimed that the entire grammar can be learned in half an hour, that words are spelled as they are pronounced, and every rule is without an exception.

Power By Seizure

By BERTRAND RUSSELL

The methods of acquiring political power in the modern world, in spite of all the novelties in industrial technique, have changed not towards something new but towards something very old; they have become almost exactly the same as they were in ancient Greece and Rome. Consider the three most powerful individuals in Europe. No one of them had any initial advantages of birth or fortune or education; all three owe their success to a combination of the qualities of the demagogue, the wire-puller and the gangster; their careers can be closely paralleled by those of many tyrants in Greece, and of Sulla, Caesar and Augustus in Rome (except that the Roman Dictators were aristocratic). The requisites of success are: an important discontented class; a persuasive tongue, by which to make the discontented believe that you will right their wrongs; skill in organizing a party and a private army; ruthlessness in seizing and holding power by bloodshed and treachery. Having achieved control of the machinery of the State, you need only regulate propaganda and the press, teach children to regard you as more or less divine, feed the army well, and keep an immense secret service to nose out every whisper of disaffection. You will then be secure against everything except defeat in war.

The great dictators have arisen out of a system of free competition—not the orderly and limited kind that was praised by Liberals and is now praised by old-fashioned Conservatives, but the all-in kind in which no methods are barred, not even wholesale murder. They have, however, established systems in which competition is no longer free, but is confined to one particular form: the endeavor to secure the favor of the tyrant, or of his lieutenant, or his lieutenant's lieutenant, according to the hierarchical status of the aspirant. In antiquity, this situation produced government by eunuchs; in the modern world, it produces government by spies. And the most successful spy is the one who inspires most terror in the Dictator.

The reversion to antiquity in recent years is remarkable, but is, I think, a natural result of certain modern inventions. Modern democracy has hitherto differed from that of Greece and Rome in the employment of the representative system, as opposed to personal voting on each issue by the citizens assembled in the market place. In ancient times, owing to the absence of an elected legislature, democracy could not extend beyond the walls of a single city. When Roman citizenship was granted to the inhabitants of other parts of Italy, the new citizens could not, in practice, acquire any share of political power, since this could only be exercised by those who were actually in Rome. The geographical difficulty was overcome, in the modern world, by the practice of choosing representatives. Until very recently, the representative, once chosen, had considerable independent power, since men living at a distance from the capital could not know what was happening soon enough, or in sufficient detail, to be able to express their opinion effectively. Now, however, owing to broadcasting, rapid mobility, newspapers etc., large countries have become more and more like the City States of antiquity; there is more personal cotnact (of a sort) between men at the center and voters at a distance; followers can bring pressure on leaders, and leaders, reciprocally, can exert influence on followers, to an extent which was impossible in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries. The result has been to diminish the importance of the representative and increase that of the leader. Parliaments are no longer effective intermediaries between voters and governments. All the dubious propagandist devices formerly confined to election times can now be employed continuously. The Greek City state, with its demagogues, tyrants, body-guards, and exiles, has revived because its methods of propaganda have again become available.

Economics—the science of wealth—arose in the Eighteenth Century, at a time when power seemed stable, but new classes were rapidly rising to opulence. There has been no corresponding science of power, and yet that would be of even greater importance than economics. Men desire power quite as much as they desire wealth; indeed power is the source of wealth even more than wealth is the source of power. Wealth, in fact, is one department of power. Economics, from Adam Smith downwards, concentrates on the kind of wealth which depends upon law; the vocation of highwaymen is not included among industries, and is not treated as a legitimate source of the "wealth of nations." Yet it was the national exercise of this vocation which caused the wealth of Rome in antiquity, of Bagdad in the Eighth Century, of Spain in the Sixteenth, and (to a considerable extent) of London in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth. It would be interesting to investigate in detail the connection between the conquest of India and the Industrial Revolution. Japan is, at the present time, seeking wealth by the time-honored method of military force, while Germany and Italy are preparing to do likewise. It is part of the general movement of integration which is characteristic of our time that the distinction between economics and politics has become more obviously artificial than it used to be, owing to the increasing importance of States in commerce and industry. Is Dr.

Alloys: Challenge To Industry

Combinations Of Metals Have Made Possible Great Bridges And Dams, As Well As Better Tools, And New Ideas Seem Certain To Bring Fortunes And Jobs To Many

By HERBERT B. NICHOLS

Christian Science Monitor

New alloys, molecules rebuilt by combining two or more metals, largely account for the realization of great structural visions. Boulder dam, the new San Francisco-Oakland bridge, streamlined trains and stratosphere balloons became possible because chemists and physicists imparted new properties to established metals by rearranging their atoms.

And if, as one industry would have us believe, the backbone of America is the tremendously important alloy called steel, then it must be chromium-plated—stainless—steel. Certainly the rate with which new products are inaugurated, higher wages paid and larger dividends declared contradicts any mournful dirge about this industry going rusty.

But more important is the story still unwritten, of great success achieved throughout the whole field of alloys, the story of unassuming researchists and the new industries resulting from their discoveries.

Chemists and metallurgists themselves are often surprised by the effects they gain through slight changes in the proportions of metals mixed. Some of the more common alloys like brass, which is the resultant of copper and zinc, or bronze, which is copper and tin, have been known for centuries. But guessing what will happen when metallurgists stray from such beaten paths is like trying to predict the exact position of a speeding electron in an atom of argon when the atom can't be seen through the microscope, and the electron, which is a thousand million million times smaller, hides itself like a speck of dust in a cathedral.

Only a few weeks ago, 4 per cent of silicon was mixed with monel metal, itself a mixture of nickel and copper, with the result that a new product was made which turned out to be twice as hard as cast iron. If it were not for the silvery color, it might have been mistaken for the long-sought "hard copper" of the ancients, a secret lost in the ages.

Still further experiments with monel metal disclosed that it becomes nonmagnetic at 200 degrees Fahrenheit despite its copper content, and by adding a small amount of aluminum, the alloy became nonmagnetic at ordinary temperatures.

A boiler manufacturer found this information valuable recently when a large supply of steel and monel metal rivets became mixed and had to be separated. He heated the whole lot to 200 degrees and then, using an elertromagnet, removed the steel rivets, leaving the monel.

While a great many of the world's most useful alloys have been discovered by chance, this is the exception rather than the rule. Usually, the result wanted is known and the search, long and diligent, is in a definite direction. It was Thomas Edison, working to improve the electric battery, who told a friend, offering sympathy for his having done so much work without results, "Oh, I've had plenty of results. I now know 9000 things that won't work." Eventually, he found what he was looking for, and continuous service by lighthouses, electric beacons, air-conditioning apparatus and a hundred other modern inventions became possible. His nickel-iron-alkaline storage battery worked.

There are more than 7000 different methods of making steel, about 100 being in common use. One automobile firm, taking inventory a year ago, discovered it was using 109 different kinds of steel in its cars, 83 of which contained an alloying metal, while the other 26 were carbon steels. Included in the list were 10 nickel steels and 22 of nickel-chromium.

Alloy steel wrenches were once far too expensive for ordinary ownership. Today, they can be bought in the 10-cent store, even the shiny, hard, nickelmolybdenum steel so much in demand.

Quality in steel means the difference, many times, between a useful tool and a broken one. Sooner or later, every wrench meets a nut that refuses to budge. Here comes the test. Which will prove the stronger, rusted nut or shiny wrench? Screwdrivers, too, must have a toughness far beyond that of a year or two ago. Mechanics not only use wrenches on screwdrivers to force rusty screws, but hammer them as if they were cold chisels and use them for pry bars and, in fact, seem to make them double for any tool that happens to be out of reach.

Nitralloy is a new special steel, case hardened with ammonia gas instead of with metals likely to introduce carbon. This has proved one of the most important metallurgical developments in years. The end product is a metal so hard it will scratch glass. Ordinary steel files are worn smooth without affecting the surface of nitralloy, and hardness remains to a remarkable extent even at high temperatures.

Thus nitralloy has found a niche in the manufacture of anvils, bushings, cams, clutches, cylinders, dies, gauges, gears, steering mechanisms, steam nozzles, pinions, rollers, spinning rings, camshafts, crankshafts and spindles. Here is a new industry which paid its own way from its beginning.

The increased demand for steel has meant far-reaching changes in the industry itself. Merely because the weird flares of Bessemer converters, melting pots whose open mouths ordinarily belch forth flaming hot gases, have not been as lively of late, dwellers in steel towns blame the "depression." The truth is, throughout America's Ruhr, open hearths and strip mills have supplanted the old-time converters and rolling mills.

Instead of a skilled mill crew pushing a red-hot sheet-bar through sets of rollers like those of a tremendous laundry wringer, each time bringing the rolls closer together until the steel is the desired thinness—a single operator controlling the rollers electrically from a tower can handle the whole process automatically. Men no longer need approach the hot metal. The capacity of one such mill is 50 to 60 times that of the old type. The workmen for the most part have been absorbed in the industry as inspectors, repairmen, electricians and control operators.

Another improvement that seems just around the corner allows engineers to pour liquid steel directly into a gap between a pair of water-cooled rollers, thus giving out a continuous strip of metal to be passed along and treated further by additional rollers.

Success with such a process depends upon a delicate balance being reached between the temperature of the steel and the temperature, pressure and speed of the rollers. But it will mean elimination of time-wasting ingot casting, expensive soaking pits, blooming and breakdown mills.

New markets for steel products have been steadily appearing. Nearly 300 different kinds of rustless, stainless steel have been patented since the first discovery. They furnish new materials for building construction and automobiles, new chemical containers for railways, tank trailers for trucks and the like. Others have taken on a high polish and appear as rivals of silver for tableware in daily use. All of which is good news for job hunters.

Where will the next triumphs in steel arise?

One hint is found in the investigations being carried on with the creep and stretch (fatigue) of metals. Engineers investigating steam turbines and boilers that have worked so hard they blew up find the trouble due to a "stretching" of the metal by amounts computed in thousandths of an inch. It is evident, then, that to build stronger turbines, enable higher steam temperatures and greater efficiency, new high-creep-strength steels must be built.

Even in the manufacture of cast iron, marked improvements have been made. Though iron pipes cast in Pennsylvania long before Napoleon led his army to defeat at Waterloo are still giving good service in many parts of America, new kinds of cast iron alloyed with nickel, copper and chromium overcome not only rust but corrosion due to chemical agents. Some will even serve in place of steel. Ordinary cast iron breaks like could molasses taffy dropped on the floor, but new processes developed in California will allow iron castings to be twisted into rods or spirals. They would almost serve for spring steel.

Just to list a few of the things needed, ideas worth $1,000,000 each to someone with the ability to find correct answers, one might start out by asking for an alloy that would be a perfect conductor for electricity. Pure metals allow considerable leakage over long distances, making it impractical to supply power to points more than 200 miles from a power station. The laboratories at the University of Toronto are close—they now have an alloy that is perfect at high temperatures, but they still need to find one that will serve at ordinary temperatures.

Someone else might find a non-corrosive plating for sheet iron or steel that will make this suitable for metal roofing, or build fireproof curtains for the theater that will stand heat without crumbling, screening that will stand up in tropical climates, tin cans that are not so expensive and won't waste so much of the world's meager supply of tin.

If none of these things appeals to inventive minds, they might look for overhead railroad wires which will not be affected by dense smoke or the abrasive action of soot and cinders, a new coating that will pre-

Social and Personal Notes

EMPRESS TO ATTEND MEETING OF PATRIOTIC WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION

Her Majesty the Empress will be pleased to accord a gracious message to the Patriotic Women's Association in the latter's 36th ordinary general meeting to be held at the Constitution Memorial Hall, Gondawara, Aoyama, Akasaka-ku, at 3 p.m. May 6, according to an announcement by the Imperial Household Department.

At 10 a.m. today medals were awarded in a ceremony to those who have rendered meritorious services toward the developments of the Association, in the presence of H.I.H. Princess Higashi-Fushimi.

PRINCESS KITASHIRAKAWA GIVES BIRTH TO FIRST SON

H.I.H. Princess Sachi Kitashirakawa, consort of H.I.H. Prince Nagahisa Kitashirakawa, gave birth to their first son at 9:53 a.m. Sunday, the Imperial Household Ministry has announced.

Her Highness is the second daughter of Baron Yoshikumi Tokugawa, and was married to His Highness in 1935.

MRS. J. T. SWIFT PASSES

Mrs. J. T. Swift, widow of the late Mr. John Trumbell Swift, died Friday at the Tokyo Sanitarium Hospital at Ogikubo. Mrs. Swift was in her 69th year and was one of the oldest residents in Japan having lived here for more than 45 years. She is survived by six children.

Funeral services are being held at 3:30 p.m. today at Christ Church, Yokohama. Interment will take place in the Foreign General Cemetery on the Bluff.

MRS. E. LYNN IN TOKYO

Mrs. E Lynn, who is here representing Elizabeth Arden, London, and is giving a series of demonstrations is stoping at the Imperial Hotel.

ENTERTAIN AT DANCE

Baron and Baroness Y. Togo entertained a large number of friends at a dance held at their home in Aoyama Saturday.

MAY FETE AT AMERICAN SCHOOL

A May Fete will be held at the American School starting at 4:30 p.m. Friday May 14. The festivities will include the crowning of the Queen of May, folk dancing and singing, the winding of the May Pole and fencing. The entire school will participate in the May Fete which will be held on the lawn, or in the gymnasium in case of bad weather.

The Parent Teacher Association has arranged a picnic supper which will be held at 6 p.m., at which children, parents and friends of the school will be present.

AMERICA-JAPAN SOCIETY SPRING GARDEN PARTY

The Japanese members of the America-Japan Society are arranging an interesting program for a Spring Garden Party in return for the successful Christmas Party prepared by the American members of the Society. The Garden Party will be held at the Kiyosumi Garden, Fukagawa-ku, starting at 3 p.m. Saturday, May 8. Refreshments will be provided at various booths and an entertainment including variety shows such as Dai Kagura, skits, Hawaian string music and choruses will be given. The party will be held rain or shine. American-born Japanese in Tokyo will be the society's guests.

NORWEGIAN MINISTER TO LEAVE FOR CHINA

The Norwegian Minister Mr. Finn Koren, who is also accredited to the Nanking Government, will shortly leave for China where he will reside for several months. Mrs. Koren is accompanying her husband and will therefore temporarily close her house in Tokyo.

18TH MEETING OF ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE

The National Anti-Saloon League will hold its 18th meeting at the hall of the Kita Rokubancho Normal School of Sendai City, from May 7 to 9.

Y.W.C.A. CHILDREN'S SEKKU DINNER PARTY

On the occasion of the boys' doll festival, the Tokyo Y.W.C.A. will give a dinner party for the children at the hall at 6 p.m. May 5. Several musical attractions will be performed.

RECITAL OF GRADUATES OF MUSASHINO SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The recital of the graduates of the Musashino School of Music will be held at the school hall, at 1:30 p.m. May 8. They will play several piano solos, violin and vocal music.

4TH RECITAL OF PUPILS OF WATANABE VIOLIN STUDIO

The pupils of the Watanabe Violin Studio will hold their 4th recital at the Nippon Seinenkai Hall, Aoyama, at 6 p.m. May 4. Miss Aiko Kono, soprano singer, will also appear on the program. Miss Kimiko Ezue will assist at the piano.

TO HOLD ONE-MAN SHOW

Mr. Tone Shimizu, noted oil painter will hold a one-man show of his recent works at the Nichido Art Galleries, Sukiyabashi, Ginza, from May 5 to 7.

TO MAKE DEBUT

Miss Hiroko Iwaya, soprano singer will hold her first vocal recital at the Nippon Seinenkai Hall, Aoyama, at 7 p.m. today. She will sing several Italian and German vocal compositions. Miss Kiyoko Shioda will assist at the piano.

INAUGURATION MEETING OF FRANCO-JAPANESE JUDICIAL SOCIETY

In order to promote mutual relation between French judicial and Japanese judicial circles, the Franco-Japanese Judicial Society has been established by prominent persons. The inauguration meeting of the society was held at the Nippon Kogyo Club, Marunouchi, at 5:30 p.m. May 1. Among those who were present at the meeting were the French Ambassador, Mr. Arsene Henry; the Belgian Ambassador Baron de Bassompierre; the Swiss Minister, Dr. Thurnheer, and Dr. Leon Mazeaud, director of the Maison Franco-Japonaise de Tokio.

AT TOR HOTEL

British Disregard

be no lasting international peace or stability, until nations can secure for themselves access free from prohibitive nationalistic barriers, first to necessary raw materials and foodstuffs, and second to foreign markets.

"Conquest cannot furnish a solution of the problem. Under twentieth-century conditions, there can be no economic victor in a great war. Each side alike suffers the wiping out on a colossal scale of its most productive man power, of its savings and its capital, of its normal trade."

"The problem of peace must be solved and can only be solved by frankly recognizing the facts of present-day life," he continued. "Trade barriers such as we have been building up since the war are in irreconcilable conflict with the modern industrial life of the world. The drive toward economic nationalism, if continued unchecked, leads surely and inevitably to war."

Mr. Ingersoll spoke with approval of the method of negotiating reciprocal trade treaties pursued by the Roosevelt administration as pointing in the right direction and as already having proved its practicability.

Secret Society Keeps Farmers From Work

NARSHALL, Liberia,—Devil Bush "schools" have been ordered to cut short their sessions so that farmers may return to their fields and grow rice.

One third of the male population of Liberia is in the Devil Bush, one of the oldest and most powerful secret societies in Africa. Liberian officials found that some members went into the bush for a year at a time, some for as long as five years. The rice crop dwindled in consequence. No efforts has been made to abolish the society.

Alien Actor Ban About Talked Out

By HAROLD B. HINTON

N. Y. Times

WASHINGTON, April 3—The bill "to protect the artistic and earning opportunities in the United States for American actors, singers, dancers, solo instrumentalists and orchestral conductors, and for other purposes" will meet its crucial test before an executive meeting of the House Immigration Committee next week, from present indications. Proponents and opponents of the proposed legislation apparently have produced all the witnesses they want to be heard in public session.

Introduced by Representative Samuel Dickstein of New York, chairman of the Immigration Committee, the measure has for its object the blocking of the loophole in existing immigration law whereby stage artists are not subjected to the contract labor clause affecting other immigrants. Mr. Dickstein would permit such exemptions only in favor of alien artists from countries which "afford, both in law and in fact, substantially similar rights and privileges to citizens of the United States" following similar callings.

Concession to Dickstein

This provision, in the pending draft, is a concession Mr. Dickstein made to objections advanced to his first proposal, which was to admit to the United States, free of contract labor restrictions, only as many stage artists of various categories as the applicant's country of origin admitted from this country. It was pointed out that an exact quota system of that kind would be difficult to administer and would also possibly deprive the American public of enjoying the art of some outstanding foreign performer.

It was argued that Estonia, for example, might produce a marvelous singer, and that this singer might be wanted for appearances in the United States. Under the original bill, permission could not have been granted unless Estonia admitted an American singer of similar repertoire. Professionals said that possibly very few American singers would want to appear in Estonia because of the long trip and the relatively few opportunities for appearances.

In order that an alien stage artist might appear here, if the Dickstein bill becomes law, his manager would have to make an application to the Secretary of Labor for a special immigration permit. This would be issued only after the Secretary of Labor had determined: (1) that the artist's country of origin afforded similar opportunities for American artists; (2) that "an artist having qualifications similar to those of the alien seeking admission cannot be found in the United States among unemployed citizens or lawful permanent resident alien"; (3) that the applicant was not an instrument musician already barred under the act of 1932; (4) that the applicant would be otherwise admissible under existing immigration laws.

Bond Might Be Needed

Armed with this permit, which might be issued only after public hearings had been held on the questions involved in (1) and (2), the manager could then request the State Department to issue to his waiting client a passport visa. He might also have to post a bond that his client would leave the United States at the expiration of the period for which the visa was issued.

Proponents of the proposal, who have included such varied figures in the theatrical world as Lawrence Tibbett, the Metropolitan Opera star; Herbert and Morton Minsky, the burlesque theater men; Warren P. Munsell, president of the Actors Equity Association, the Chorus Equity Association and others, have maintained that their adversaries were distorting the purpose of the bill.

They say that it is obviously intended only to cover "run-of-the-mine" stage performers, and that there would never be any difficulty about bringing outstanding foreign artists of established repute to America. They frankly want aspiring American artists to get the first chance at what jobs are open in these lean days.

The project, however, has aroused the opposition of the motion-picture industry and the organized concert business of the country. In these fields, especially, foreign artists and performers are needed to furnish "box-office lure," without which the public cannot be attracted to the movies or to the concert halls, the managers testified.

The motion-picture industry has built up a thriving export trade, and more American films are shown in foreign theaters than in those of any other country. The industry attributes much of this success to the employment of actors and actresses from foreign countries.

Concert managers pointed out that they had to sell to their clients a series of entertainments lasting an entire season. Unless they included on their lists a certain number of world-famous foreign performers, they said, the ultimate consumer could not be persuaded to subscribe to a season's attractions.

Walter Damrosch, dean of American music, testified against the bill on the general grounds that no geographical or other artificial limitations should be placed upon the spread of art. Gilbert Miller pleaded for the freest possible admission of foreign actors as a beneficial infusion of new blood into the American theater. Sidney Howard, on behalf of the Dramatists' Guild and Authors' League, argued against any restriction.

Cites Benefits of 1932 Act

On the other side of the question, Samuel T. Ansell told of the benefits he said American instrumental musicians had gleaned from the act of 1932, which subjected alien instrumentalists to the full operation of the contract labor clause. It had brought, he told the committee, development of American talent to a point where the finest symphony orchestras of the country were manned completely by American citizens or by aliens who had come into the country through ordinary immigration channels.

Mr. Dickstein, as an immigration expert, maintained that the exemption of stage performers under the present law was a constant menace to the enforcement of the immigration laws. He said that an unscrupulous manager could get an exemption for an alleged artist, and then turn him out on the country if he failed to make good, and that the Labor Department could not keep track of these aliens, once they were past Ellis Island. Representatives of the Labor and State Departments, however, tended to minimize these aspects.

The Immigration Committee once before approved a similar bill and it passed the House last year, only to die in the Senate.

May Day Is Feted As Flower Day In Hawaiian Islands

HONOLULU, Hawaii May 1—Kapiolani Kawananakoa, 9-year-old descendant of Hawaiian rulers of monarchial days, presided as Queen of Hawaii's tenth annual Lei Day. This novel holiday, celebrated on May 1, is devoted to special observance of the Island tradition of weaving and wearing flower garlands.

Don Blanding, artist and poet, who originated the Lei Day idea when he resided here a decade ago, flew back to Honolulu for this year's observance.

Next distinctively Hawaiian holiday on the Island calendar will be Kamehameha Day, on June 11, honoring the memory of King Kamehameha, who first brought all the islands together under one rule. Pageantry, parades and sport events will characterize Kamehameha Day observance throughout the Islands this year.

Because the holiday comes during the summer travel season when there are an unusually large number of visitors in the Islands, special efforts is made to present an outstanding program of civic pageantry. June is also the height of the flowering tree season and floral decoration schemes are stressed in the various entertainments.

A parade of floats depicting Island scenes dating back to the period of Kamehameha, will feature the festivities in Honolulu. Reviving an old tradition, the most beautiful women of the various islands—dressed in colorful, flowing ceremonial riding robes—will parade on horseback. The revival of this custom—known as pa-u riding—will be a highlight of the parade.

4-Power Rule Scheme Faces A New Europe

By JOHN ELLIOT

N. Y. Herald Tribune

PARIS.—It was a peculiar coincidence that the death of Sir Austen Chamberlain should have followed by just a few days the reopening of negotiations by Germany and Italy for a new Rhineland pact. For Chamberlain was, together with Aristide Briand and Dr. Gustav Stresemann, the architect of the Locarno treaties which for a decade formed the cornerstone of European peace, and indeed for a few years opened up a perspective of the European federation that Goethe and other advanced thinkers had dreamed of.

This vision was destroyed by the advent of Adolf Hitler to power in the Reich four years ago, at the head of a regime based on nationalist and militarist aspirations, and in particular by his action in unilaterally tearing up the treaty of Locarno last year. Now Herr Hitler proposes a new Locarno on the basis of the 1925 document.

Situation Greatly Changed

Since the original Locarno pact went into effect, a number of new factors have totally changed the European situation. First, there was the Fuehrer's own action in reoccupying the Rhineland and fortifying it. For a demilitarized Rhine zone separating France and Germany was a basic conception of the old Rhineland pact as negotiated by Chamberlain, Stresemann and Briand.

Second, Germany having in the interim left the League of Nations, is no longer bound by the obligations of the Covenant. But in the treaty of 1925 it was the Council of the League that was to define which was the aggressor state in event of war between France and Germany.

Third, the position of Belgium has altered. In the original treaty, Belgium, like Germany and France, was not only a guaranteed state, but also a guarantor nation, and offered to come to the aid of a victim of aggression with its military forces. Now Belgium, owing to Rexist and Flemish pressure, wants to revert to its pre-war status of neutrality, and in any revised Locarno treaty to become simply a guaranteed state.

The Anglo-French Accord

Fourth, France and Great Britain within the last year, since Hitler violated the first Locarno treaty, have exchanged reciprocal guaranties of security against unprovoked aggression. Britain has become a guaranteed power which she was not in the original treaty, and is anxious to preserve this status in any revised Locarno pact. Italy objects to this proposal, however, being extremely suspicious regarding the British rearmament program, and demands that Britain, like her, should simply guarantee the security of the Rhineland without receiving guarantees.

Incidentally, the Anglo-French exchange of guaranties which followed Hitler's military occupation of the Rhineland last March has had the effect of transforming the old Locarno pact into an Anglo-French military alliance, which French diplomacy in the days of Clemenceau and Poincare strove in vain to obtain. This interesting development helps to explain why the Quai d'Orsay today is not overanxious for the negotiations of a new Locarno pact.

Italy and Reich Close

Fifth, Italy and Germany have formed a virtual alliance whereby they agree to act in concert on all questions of European policy. Germany does not demand the abrogation of the Franco-Soviet pact in her new Locarno proposals, as she did some time ago. But Berlin would render the Franco-Soviet pact and all French alliances in eastern and central Europe innocuous by giving France the right to come to the aid of her allies only if England and Italy, acting conjointly, should decide that Germany really was guilty of an act of aggression. In other words, if Hitler should one day decide to launch his armies against some country in eastern Europe, Italy, his ally, could veto any French plans to render assistance to France's allies.

Trotzky Gives Alibis To Prove His Innocence

By CLIFFORD RAYMOND

Chicago Tribune

MEXICO CITY, April 13—Leon Trotzky, exiled former war commissar of Russia, met his adversaries today on their two main fronts. Did he send directives to the anti-Stalin terrorist centers of Soviet Russia, which by now have been largely liquidated, first through Vladimir Romm by letters and second by a meeting with G. L. Piatakov in Oslo, Norway, in December, 1935?

Romm is a bloshevik journalist, if he still lives. Piatakov was Russian assistant commissar for heavy industries. He no longer lives. He was shot after the treason trial in Moscow last January, along with twelve other alleged and, for what it may be worth, confessed conspirators. They admitted that they were to bring Reichsfuehrer Hitler's and the mikado's war machines down on the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics for the wealth of the Ukraine and the Urals and of Sakhalin island and the Amur valley.

A "Test of Facts"

Romm is well known in Washington, where he was the correspondent of Izvestia, official Russian newspaper. He was not a defendant in the January trial. He was a witness. That may be a slight differential for a firing squad. A number of American newspaper men pleaded for him with the Russian ambassador in Washington when he confessed his anti-Stalin activities and said he had been the intermediary between Trotzky and the conspirators.

Attorney Albert Goldman of Chicago, representing Trotzky before Dr. John Dewey's unofficial commission, which is giving the exile an opportunity to defend himself against the Russian charges, took one date in Romm's testimony before the Soviet military collegium in Moscow to put the whole nightmare of terror to the test of facts.

Romm said he met Trotzky in Paris at the end of July, 1933. In all he said he carried five letters back and forth between Trotzky and the terrorists in Russia. Credibility must stand upon this July of 1933. The date can be the gibbet for either Trotzky or Stalin. They can swing from it, one or the other, as an odious creature. One is cleared, the other damned by events of the end of that July. If Romm went into a cruel trance when he said he met Trotzky in Paris that July, then the Russian burocracy and Stalin's murderous party government is all Trotzky says it is.

Trotzky Traces His Journey

Back of Trotzky, as he testifies today, is a rough outline map of France. It shows the towns and villages of Cassis, Aix-en-Provence, Marseilles, Montauban, Tonneins, Royan, and St. Palais.

Trotzky, with a school teacher's ruler to use in tracing his journey, begins his story. According to Romm, Trotzky was in Paris at the end of July, 1933. If he was, then the Russian convulsions may be attributed to his atrocious planning. If he was not there, then we have a revelation of dictatorial calculation as serpentine as the drops of poison which might secretly go into the goblet of a Florentine guest.

Trotzy went from Istanbul, Turkey, in July, 1933, on the steamship Bulgaria with his wife, Natalia Sedov; Max Shachtman of New York, Rudolf Klement, a German refugee; another American, and a French friend.

Says GPU Was at Heels

Trotzky was a sick man. A liberal French government had given him permission to enter the country for medical treatment and after that to go to Corsica. Trotzky said he was compelled to out-trick the relentless GPU (Soviet secret police).

How did he know, Carlton Beals, a member of the Dewey commission, wants to learn, that the GPU would be on his heels? The GPU, says Trotzky, is everywhere. Every Soviet agent in the United States is a servant of the GPU. (Mr. Browder, please respond to Mr. Trotzky).

By secret arrangement, Mr. and Mrs. Trotzky were taken off the boat on a tender and taken to the little town of Cassis. Their friends and their baggage, their archives, as Trotzky calls them, went separate ways. The baggage went in Shachtman's name to Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Trotzky, posing as Americans "in spite of may atrocious English," went by automobile, accompanied by another car containing persons who had met them, headed for a villa at St. Palais, which had been rented for them on July 18. St. Palais is near Royan.

Trotzky Becomes Ill

But Trotzky was suffering from lumbago. The cars could not make the distance to St. Palais. The night was spent at Tonneins, a summer resort. The party continued the next day. Trotzky, the pseudo American, arrived at his villa at 3 o'clock on July 25. He was nowhere near Paris when Romm was meeting him.

Now there is another event.

"It was an accident," Trotzky says. "I cannot always rely upon accidents. If the GPU finds other dates for my meeting Romm to give him subversive directions I might not have accidents to help me."

Mrs. Trotzky submits a deposition. She has been sitting this afternoon in a corner of the room. She may later be a witness. In the deposition she relates what Trotzy also tells. L. T., as she calls him, is a sick man.

Tells of Prairie Fire

"I had installed L. T., she says, "in the roomiest and coolest apartment and was myself in another room looking at the countryside through the windows. Fire? Dry grass, hay, pines were burning, heat, the house was filled with smoke."

A rare specimen of the revolutionary diction and honest.

The fire Trotzky says, was his happy accident. It fixes his residence far from Paris when he was, as he says ironically, giving subversive directives to Romm, whom he never knew. He and Mrs. Trotzky, known as two elderly Americans, sit in an automobile unknown for whom they are while a friendly wind takes the fire in the hedges and brush away from the villa.

Ill for Two Months

Now they are definitely placed at Tonneins and St. Palais for July 24 and 25. Trotzky, after he had been taken out of the automobile, was ill for two months. His first visit to Paris was not until December, 1933. Meanwhile, Romm was supposed to have been conspiring with him in Paris months before.

But here is a strange thing that clouds this story. Although French police regulations require the registration of guests, there was an allowance which permitted such overnight guests as the Trotzky at Tonneins not to register when they arrived and to forget their obligations to the innkeeper on the morning of their departure. They forgot it in their haste to get away.

And at St. Palais, when and where the fire would have proved that they were not in Paris, they were known only as two elderly Americans and were not recognized as Mr. and Mrs. Trotzky until several months later when the provincial press began to carry pictures of the two.

"Did you ever know Romm?" Attorney Goldman asks Trotzky.

Trotzky had never even heard of Romm.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

Americas Find

controlled Argentine company, the Yacimientos Petroliferos Fiscales to buy the interests of the Standard Oil Company in that republic. In addition to the more or less current reasons why a nation might wish to regain control over a great source of wealth lying in its own soil, the Argentines claim they were moved by several considerations, as can be learned from a perusal of the most recent summing up of the Latin-American oil situation—Monteiro Lobato's O Escandalo Petrolifero, published late in 1936, in Brazil.

It is alleged that in the interests of preventing competition and of a lowering in the price of gasoline, foreign companies exploiting oil in Argentina were instrumental in seeing that all laboratory tests made abroad of samples sent them were returned as negative. It is said that this continued for many years until suspicions about the honesty of the tests were aroused. Argentine technicians, later added by Germans experts, established the fact that there was oil in the districts where it was claimed none existed. It was that which led the Government to step into the picture. Though the sale of the Standard interests has fallen through, the tendency is for the Government to establish, through the Y. P. F., an oil monopoly in the Argentine.

Recently, the Governor of the State of Alagoas, where oil has been found by Brazilians, also aided by a well-known German research company, has alleged that certain officials in the Federal Government are doing all they can to prevent his State from exploiting its oil resources.

The Paradox in Brazil

The apparent paradox of Brazil aiding a country which is fighting a foreign oil company on the one hand and aiding it on the other is explained by the fact that the department and individuals accused by Messrs. Lobato and the Governor of the State of Alagoas do not represent the attitude of the Federal Government as a whole. The accused have hotly denied that they are part of a "conspiracy" against the best interests of Brazil and that they are playing the game of the foreign concessionaires.

The foreign companies too deny subversion and assert that much of the opposition is due to business methods which local companies themselves use and deem justifiable. One of the most sober judgments on the whole situation is that of an editorial in the Argentine paper, La Prensa, Feb. 2, 1937, which compared the mounting costs to the Government of maintaining the Y. P. F. with its financial returns. The editorial stated that the private companies were more efficient in the exploitation of the by-products of petroleum and spent much less in publicity than the Government agency.

Cotton Inquiry Would Abolish 'Guess' on Crops

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The Senate's two-year investigation of cotton marketing produced today ten recommendations for legislation, including a proposal to eliminate or curtail government crop estimates.

Among the other recommendations, to be studied by the Senate Agriculture Committee Monday were elimination or reduction of Southern deliveries, prohibitions on the extension or marginal credits, and limitation on the among of interest any one firm may have on future exchanges at one time.

A confidential copy of the report, containing almost sixty pages, drafted by the subcommittee headed by Chairman Ellison D. Smith, Democrat, of South Carolina, which conducted the inquiry, has been turned over to members of the full committee for study over the week end.

Government loan policies and crop-reduction programs, the subcommittee said, "though justified as emergency relief measures, have failed to bring about any permanent economic recovery."

It contended that producers and the cotton trade world be far better off if the foreign market could be revived by sound commercial credits and removal of trade barriers.

Crop Estimates Called Guesses

With regard to the cotton crop estimates, it said that while these official reports are prepared along scientific lines, they are, after all, "nothing less than scientific guesses, based only in part upon known factors existing at the time the estimate is made."

"While it would appear to be a proper function of the government to report from time to time acreage, crop conditions and ginnings, as to the time such reports are made," the subcommittee said, "there seems to be no valid reason why the government should indulge in prophecies with respect to the size of the crop, especially since such prophecies so frequently bring about price movements on the futures exchanges which, in the light of later developments, are totally unjustified and which would not occur but for such crop estimates."

"It is the opinion of this committee," the report said, "that these crop estimates should be discontinued altogether, or else confined to the one report in December, or to two reports, one in November and one in December, inasmuch as the amount of cotton ginned prior to November is too small to satisfactorilly indicate the size of the crop."

Exchange Contract Reform Asked

The committee's other recommendations were:

"That the futures exchange contract be reformed so as to:

"(a) Eliminate the transferable feature of the delivery notices by not permitting any notices to be issued with respect to deliveries in any delivery month until trading in such month has ceased.

"(b) Provide for some fixed date within the delivery month, on or before which all deliveries must be made, which date should be such as to allow the sellers sufficient time within which to make delivery and also give to the buyers sufficient time within which to take delivery and ship during the delivery month.

"(c) Eliminate Southern deliveries, or else reduce the number of such delivery points and restrict such points to interior points in those sections where the crop is consumed.

"(d) Limit the number of grade qualities which may be included in any one unit of delivery (which, on the New York Cotton Exchange, is 100 bales), especially if Southern deliveries are to be retained and deliveries thereby made easier.

"(e) Prohibit the delivery on futures contract of high density bales at interior delivery points, if such delivery points are adopted.

Marketing Reforms Sought

"Prohibit the clearing of any trades through any exchange clearing association which have not been publicly made on the exchange.

"Limit the amount of interest which any one person, firm, or corporation may have at any one time one delivery month and in any twelve consecutive delivery months.

"Prohibit or restrict the extension of marginal credits.

"Restriction of call sales, by including such call sales within the limitation which any one person, firm or corporation can have at any one time on any and all exchanges.

"Have the prices and differences in the designated markets representative, as nearly as possible, of the commercial rather than the nominal values.

"Eliminate the repeated reviews of certificated cotton by the establishment of a guaranty fund, against which the ultimate receiver who takes cotton off of certificate can claim for the amount of his loss or damage, in the event the cotton is of lesser grade or staple, and consequently of a lesser value than that specified in the certificate.

"Prohibit the advancement of any governmental funds to any co-operative association, unless that association is operated strictly on co-operative principles, and not as an ordinary cotton merchant."

Film Officials Highest Paid In Returns of 1936

N.Y. Tribune

WASHINGTON, April 10—Annual reports filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission revealed today that screen stars and film directors were better paid during 1936 than most business executives.

The reports, covering corporate fiscal years ending in 1936, were made under the securities exchange act of 1934. The law provides that corporations must include in their annual statement the names and total remuneration of officers, directors or employes receiving the three highest incomes.

A $1,220,242 bonus by Loew's Inc. placed the three who shared it at the top of the list. It was divided among Louis B. Mayer, Irving Thalberg (now dead) and J. Robert Rubin, co-partners under the name of Louis B. Mayer Pictures.

Close behind was Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew's president, who received $312,785. Other high-salaried film figures were Miss Kay Francis, of Warner Brothers, $227,500; David Bernstein, Loem's vice-president, $213,857; Arthur M. Loew, $205,544; Joe E. Brown, Warner Brothers cavern-mouthed comedian, $201,562; Leslie Howard, Warner Brothers British star, $185,000; and three from Universal Pictures—Miss Irene Dunne, $102,777; James Whale, $105,000, and Gregory Lacava, $102,000.

Bobby Jones, of golfing fame, was listed as one of the three highest paid employes of A. G. Spalding and Brothers, but the amount he received was not disclosed at the firm's request. The reports are open to the public except such parts that corporations occasionally ask the S.E.C. to keep in confidential files.

In addition to S. E. C. reports, the Treasury is required by law to file annually with Congress a list giving the names and incomes of all persons receiving $15,000 or more a year. This list is taken from income tax returns. Repeal of the law requiring publication of the Treasury report to Congress is being sought by Representative Robert L. Doughton, Democrat, of North Carolina. He maintains that it leaves the persons named "prey to racketeers."

Annual reports of other corporations showed:

Columbia Pictures Corporation, New York—Harry Cohn, director-president, $182,040, including expense allowances; Frank Capra, director, $208,000; Ronald Colman, actor, $162,500.

American I. G. Chemical Corporation, New York—Walter H. Duisberg, director-vice-president, $25,276; William H. Vom Rath, director-vice-president-secretary, $25,259.

Vick Chemical, Inc., New York—H. S. Richardson, chairman of board of operating, subsidies, $34,150; L. Richardson, director and president, $58,512.

Benson & Hedges, New York—James J. Head, president-director, $15,448.

Sears, Roebuck Co., Chicago—Robert E. Wood, $86,223; Lessing J. Rosenwald, $69,519; James M. Barker, $38,615; Donald M. Nelson, $38,615; Emil J. Pollock, $38,615.

A. G. Spalding & Bros., New York—Julian W. Curtiss, chairman of the board, $19,000.

Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., Chicago—S. L. Avery, president-director, $100,180; F. M. Folson, vice-president-director, $42,276; R. H. Fogler, vice-president-director, $40,160.

Lane Bryant, Inc., New York—Harry Liverman, president-director, $28,220; Louis A. Leopold, director, $18,056.65.

Dome Mines, Ltd., New York—J. H. Stovel, third vice-president-general manager, $31,113; Jules S. Bache, president, treasurer-director, $26,500.

Madison Square Garden Corporation, New York—John Reed Kilpatrick, president, $30,560; James J. Johnston, director of boxing, $14,250; John S. Hammond, director, $10,074. Twenty-two directors received a total of $45,494.

Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio—Harvey S. Firestone, chairman, $25,000; John W. Thomas, president, $65,000.

signs.

One day, Angels cheats Juliana, takes her into a filthy cafe on the outskirts of city, and compels her to sing, such as she had done on her early day. But Goalman who drops in on her at this cafe shouts instantly "She is too beautiful in her nature to stand such stage."

Angels who fail in his object challenge Goalman to a battle.

During the fighting Goalman rushes over to embrace Juliana, Angels them aims a pistol and fines. Juliana who has shielded Goalman with her own body and falls.

Manhattan Rhythm dies away in atmosphere of forlorn sentimentality and delight of youth.

Two other minor features are:

1. Opera "Son and Mother" (one scene)
   Author: Issei Hisamatsu
   Composer: Heikichi Takeuchi
2. Opera "Nanto Shui" (two scenes)
   Author: Harumichi Ono
   Composer: Kanji Mori

A performance is given every day from May 1 to May 31. Commencing at 1 p.m. On Sunday it is given twice commencing at 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. autumn foliage. Green leaves of foliage provide an unforgetful scene. Cuckoos chirp in the woods and singing frogs are found in the streams. It is a place for small hikes and pleasant walks.

3. Mount Rokko is an enjoyable place to ascend. The mountain, 3,000 feet high, offers not only pleasant scenery but clear air, bright light and fresh wind, and flying cloud. It will give visitors that grand "I'm sitting-on-top-of-the-world" atmosphere. It has become mountain park recently with the installation of modern equipment such as the drive way, Hankyu dining room and Rokko Hotel. In this vicinity, there are Arima Hot Spring and Horai Kyo and other interesting places.

Woman For Foreman Of N.J. Grand Jury; Called First In U.S.

Christian Science Monitor

NEWARK, N. J., April 7.—Miss J. Isabell Sims, prominent in Newark civic affairs, is today foreman of the April term of the Federal Grand Jury in the United States District Court here, occupying what is perhaps the unique position of the first woman to serve in such a post in the United States.

The appointment of Miss Sims by Judge William Clark of the New Jersey District Court was seen as the crystallization of efforts by Judge Clark to provide women with more active responsibilities in Government.

Three months ago Judge Clark, senior federal justice for the district, ordered that women be drawn for petit jury service. Later he established a school for jurors at which many women were students. Observers here saw his action yesterday in making Miss Sims a jury foreman as a logical development of the policy outlined for his court.

The Judge stated in announcing the appointment that he had been impressed by the capabilities of women serving in federal juries in the Philadelphia court during a period while he was sitting temporarily in that jurisdiction.

Two US Concerns Challenge Court Decision

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

WASHINGTON, May 4—Immediately following the Supreme Court's validation of the 1934 Revenue Act which imposes a processing tax of three cents a pound on all coconut oil imported from the Philippines, two large companies have challenged the legality of the decision, it is learned today.

The Cincinnati Soap Company and the Haskins Company of Omaha, Nebraska, which are instituting a court fight declared that the tax is an excessive levy and is therefore unlawful, adding that its benefits were purely local and not for the general welfare of either producer or consumer.

Prime Minister

salary to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Baldwin

Mr. Baldwin, who wound up the debate, said that if rationalization of the system of government proposed by the Opposition were to take place before the proposals in the Bill were introduced, probably no members would live to see the proposals brought forward. The Government had looked at the question as a whole, and done the best they could with it. There was no reason why salaries, having already been cut to one-half of their original value, should be still further cut down. He held the view strongly that there should be no reduction of the salaries of men bearing the heavy and increasing responsibilities of State, and of those who succeeded them in office, and there should be no derogation from their dignity.

In this country there was a high standard of public life and it was essential that men in high office should be placed in a position where they should be free from temptation. It would be wise if in democratic countries men in positions or responsibility were paid on a scale equal to our own.

Debate Marred

ter, a plan for a six-year period of appeasement, and back whichever side accepted it.

Labor members, even the more prominent back-benchers such as Mr. Arthur Henderson and Lieutenant-Commander Fletcher, continued to accuse the Government of partiality; and Mr. Maxton showed the extent of Opposition impartiality by associating himself with them as a fierce partisan of the Spanish Government side. He asked that this side should be given the usual facilities accorded to constitutional Governments, and that the other side should be treated as pirates.

Later debate showed that among the Government's supporters were some sympathizers with the insurgents, but most of them, such as Captain Cazalet and Mr. Crossley, took Mr. Churchill's cue and held that every chance for mediation should be seized and meanwhile the strictest neutrality observed.

With his usual industrious fire, Mr. Noel Baker summed up for the Opposition. He said that the Basque Government at least could not be accused of anti-clericalism. Theirs was a purely Spanish Army, fighting against a foreign invasion; and the Basques had served us well in the 1914-18 War. They were now supplying us with iron ore, whereas the insurgents were supplying Italy and Germany. Was it not our interest to send the Basques food? He held that we had a right to send food to both sides. What we were doing was to prejudice the international laws of the sea, which would be most valuable to us in any emergency.

Mr. Eden's Promise

Mr. Eden, in a final reply, repeated that if any British ship, proceeding even against the Board of Trade communication, were attacked on the high seas, it would be protected. But it had been the Government's duty to warn shipping of danger, and the Shipowners' Parliamentary Committee had just denied any dissatisfaction. Again, the Government was quite ready to consider sweeping up mines on the high seas. But action within territorial waters might be held to be as much intervention as landing troops to escort lorries.

Though non-intervention was scoffed at, what was the alternative? In fact, much progress had been made, and he refused to give others any pretext for tearing non-intervention to pieces. Finally, referring to Mr. Churchill's suggestion, he promised to search eagerly for any chance of mediation.

The last incident before the division was Mr. Eden's plain statement in reply to a question from Sir Archibald Sinclair. "We hope," he said "that British merchant ships at St. Jean de Luz will not go to Bilbao, because we do not think it safe for them. But if they do go, they will be protected up to the limit of territorial waters."

Miss Hara Gives Concert At Rome

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

ROME, May 5—Miss Chieko Hara, young Japanese pianist from Paris who is in Italy to give a series of 20 concerts, was warmly applauded at a recital given here last night for a select audience including Japanese Ambassador Yotaro Sugimura and members of the Japanese Embassy.

Her concert, comprising mostly of works from Bach, Schumann, and Chopin, was given under the auspices of the Italian Institute For Middle and Far Eastern Studies.

Ever-Normal Granary Plan's Function Hoped

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

WASHINGTON, May 5—Despite knowledge of the drastic economy drive being made by Congress to slash expenditures in all government departments, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace told representatives of the press today that he had hopes that the ever-normal granary plan would function by autumn.

Secretary Wallace emphasized that it is possible to work out the plan despite a heavy slash in expenditures. He also predicted an increase in farm incomes this year, pointing out that the outlook for farmers is far better this year than last year. Contributing factors, he declared, are improved weather and industrial conditions.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

Chief Justice Hughes Makes Another Attack

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

WASHINGTON, May 6—Generally interpreted as another attack directed against President Roosevelt's court reform plan, Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes, of the United States Supreme Court, today made a blunt assertion that a competent independent judiciary must be in parallel with legislative and executive instructions in order to safeguard individual rights.

Speaking before a meeting of the American Law Institute, held here today, the Chief Justice pleaded. "Success of Democratic institution lies in the success of processes of reason as opposed to tyranny and force."

Justice Hughes strongly defended the present procedures of courts, asserting that there is no inordinate or unjustified delays in the Supreme Court.

New German Steamer Launched Before Hitler

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

HAMBURG, May 5—Christened the "Wilhelm Gustloff", in honor of the Nazi chief of Switzerland who was assassinated last year, Germany's newest 25,000-ton steamer slid off the ways this afternoon in the presence of high German and Nazi officials including Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler.

It is understood that the vessel, which belongs to the Nazi labor organization, Kraft Durch Freude, is equipped with the most modern conveniences including special hygienic facilities.

The vessel, it was disclosed, will take members of the Kraft Durch Freude who are on vacations, on sea voyages to foreign countries. It is pointed out that using this method, workers will be able to make trips at a minimum expense.

Chiang's Adviser Stays On, Despite Stiff Opposition

Christian Science Monitor

SHANGHAI.—W. H. Donald, Australia-born adviser to Gen. and Madam Chiang Kai-shek, has been forced to weather quite a political storm since he played an important part in freeing the Generalissimo at the time of the "Sian coup" last December. But weather it he has, and he once again pursues the relative even tenor of his way as informal "contact man."

The storm was created in part by political machinations of Chinese individuals, in part by the Chinese language press. One Nanking organ generally regarded as at least semi-official carried a lengthy denunciation of his alleged meddling and demanded that he be deported from China. But nobody upon whom General Chiang looks with favor is subjected to any such proceeding—in Mr. Donald's case, his Australian nationality would protect him in any event.

Apparently the excitement was chiefly due to the fact that Mr. Donald was quite outspoken, on his return from Sian, concerning the allegedly harebrained tactics of some of the Nanking military leaders who wanted to air-bomb Sian at a time when this would have placed the captive Generalissimo in gravest jeopardy. According to Mr. Donald, only a snowstorm prevented the bombing planes from bestowing their favors not only on Gen. Chang Hsiao-liang, the Generalissimo's captor, but also upon the captive and Mr. Donald himself.

Chemists Learn How To Live In World Of Glass

Christian Science Monitor

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., April 14.—Description of an unusual world in which "selenium oxychloride" takes the place of water, brought smiles from chemists listening to Prof. Gilbert B. L. Smith of the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute at the American Chemical Society meeting here.

On his hypothetical planet, Professor Smith visualized a sphere nearly covered with tremendous glaciers of solid crystals, a land peopled by strange beings who spanned rivers of selenium oxychloride with platinum bridges and protected themselves from the weather with tungsten umbrellas. This apparently fanciful world is not as unreal as it sounds, according to the Brooklyn chemist. His announcement of results with selenium oxychloride culminates five years of research and adds another solvent to be listed with water, alcohol, benzine, ether and carbon disulphide.

Through the Floor

On the earth, water is contained in practically everything in existence, from an apple to the steel piston of a locomotive. Apparently there is no material which is absolutely insoluble in water, even finely divided glass, quartz, gold, etc., dissolving to a certain degree. Ether is a good solvent for fats and oils, the alcohols take care of resins, and carbon disulphide dissolves phosphorous. The new solvent described by Professor Smith is a heavy, straw-colored liquid, which freezes at 65 degrees Fahrenheit, has a marked affinity for water and will attack virtually all unsaturated organic compounds.

In fact, the professor said some of it froze one night, broke its containers, dripped on the wooden floor of an institute laboratory and then ate a hole right through to the room below, destroying several instruments in the physics laboratory and even attacking bakelite fixtures.

Continuing his picture of the "selenium oxychloride world," Professor Smith declared that mountains would have to be of glass or feldspar, and all bridges as well as boats would necessarily be built of platinum and tungsten, virtually the only metals that will not readily dissolve in the new liquid.

No Place for Wood

"Snow would fall every time the temperature dropped below the mild warmth of spring, and when it rained, we should have to carry glass, tungsten, or platinum umbrellas," said Professor Smith. "Glass is another of the few substances which selenium oxychloride will not attack. Wooden materials could nowhere be exposed to the weather, since the solvent is a powerful oxidizing agent.

"In a selenium oxychloride world, the Temperate Zones would be studded with huge glaciers of white crystals, owing to the high freezing point of the liquid. Animals could not drink it, unless their stomachs were glass lined.

"Our distilling apparatus for manufacturing the solvent had to be especially designed and built entirely of glass, even to the joints and stopcocks.

"Owing to the strong propensity for the solvent to absorb water from the atmosphere, it has to be dehydrated several times in preparation, and vacuum-distilled before it can be obtained in sufficient purity for use in experiments. All experiments with it have to be carried out in closed glass containers, closed because the liquid fumes away when in contact with the air."

But the analogy is made difficult when carried too far; for neither the selenium nor the oxychloride ion corresponds to the ions of waters. A water system and the ammonia system have the hydrogen ion in common, (water being made up of two parts hydrogen to one part of oxygen and ammonia possessing a hydroxyl ion.)

Such strange things happen to materials dissolved in this new solvent that chemists must revise their theories of ionization as applied to acids, bases and salts, Professor Smith said, explaining his work as a development of the non-aqueous solvent research carried out by the late Prof. Edward C. Franklin, of Leland Stanford University, who published exhaustive studies of the liquid ammonia system of reactions.

Vienna Policy Shows Swing To Little Entente

Christian Science Monitor

VIENNA, April 10—The sudden flareup between Austria and Germany over the incident in which a former railway official, Franz Bruckner, was punished for laying a wreath with a political inscription on the grave of Adolf Hitler's parents, has been extinguished, according to the statement by the official German press bureau released here by the official Austrian Press Service.

(According to Austrian officials, the incident to which the German press suddenly objected took place last November.)

Austrians, it is declared, may put flowers on all graves, provided they do not do it as a political demonstration.

Meanwhile it is noted here that one of the Government newspapers very close to Chancellor Schuschnigg emphatically stated last night that the Hapsburg restoration is not a live political issue now and that the Royalists must avoid offending and alarming the Little Entente by raising the question.

Seeks Cooperation

Chancellor Schuschnigg wants above all to remove this obstacle in the way of cooperation between Vienna and Prague in order to further his plans to cut the leading strings tying him to Rome and Berlin.

The German press was recently warned against printing unfavorable articles by the Vienna Government in a communication issued by a branch of the official press service.

One of the vital points in the friendship pact concluded between Austria and Germany last July was the mutual agreement to avoid press polemics and attacks. Even before this agreement was signed a press truce had been arranged and observed. During recent weeks however this agreement has been violated with growing frequency by both sides.

As a protest, a number of leading German papers have sharply complained against the atttitude of the Austrian press toward National Socialism and the Government here recently answered that protest by asserting that German papers had offended much more flagrantly than the Austrian press.

Fortnightly Air Service

Croydon and Singapore, linking up with the Quantas air services across Australia, was also closely concerned in the Pan American project, because of the extension of the Croydon-Australia service across Tasmania to New Zealand which is under active discussion.

Prime Minister Michael Savage in announcing the agreement with Pan American Airways, stated that the public would be glad to know that before arriving at a decision his Government had consulted the Governments of all the members of the British Commonwealth having interests in the Pacific. The paramount consideration of the New Zealand Government was the safeguarding of British interests, potential as well as actual, in the Pacific, and effective steps had been taken to that end. Consultation with the Governments, particularly of Britain and Australia, had been close and continuous, and the whole matter had been reviewed at a conference in Wellington last September when representatives of the British, Australian and New Zealand Governments had been present. In consequence of the decision reached at that conference, the New Zealand Government had decided to refuse certain modifications of the terms of the agreement which the Pan American company had sought.

Tasman Issue

The final point by the Prime Minister provides an assurance to British interests concerned in linking New Zealand to the Croydon-Australia air service that there will be no foreign competition across the Tasman between Australia and New Zealand. However, there has been much discussion in secret between the British interests regarding control of this final section.

Imperial Airways operate flying boats from England to Singapore, the service being continued by Quantas Airways, a combination of Australian and Imperial Airways captain in which the English concern, although having a substantial interest, has a minority holding. For the extension to New Zealand, still a matter of negotiation, the Dominion Government is said to favor state ownership and operation, but the Australian Federal Government is believed to prefer a similar capital arrangement to that adopted in forming the Quantas Company. Otherwise, it is assumed that there would not have been so much delay in announcing a final decision, which would add 1500 miles to an air route from England to Brisbane (Queensland), which is already the longest in the world.

Belgian Election Shows Return To Democratic Trend

Christian Science Monitor

The spectacular though effervescent ascent of the Fascist Rex Party in democratic Belgium was an indication of a recent tendency of people everywhere to go to political extremes for the answer to their economic problems. The rout of that party at the polls on April 11 is one more indication of a turning back to middle-of-the-road methods and to faith in democratic procedures.

On May 24 of last year the democratic middle-of-the-way parties lost seats in the Belgian Parliament, on the one hand to the Communists and on the other hand to the Rexists (Fascists) and the Flemish Nationalists (a section of this party has Fascist leanings). Few Belgians had heard of the Rexists and their leader, Leon Degrelle, before the campaign which gave Mr. Degrelle twenty-one seats in the lower chamber.

And yet the Rexist success at that time was by no means an accidental and unrepeatable phenomenon. A short while later the Revists elected twelve members to the numerically smaller upper chamber which is chosen in indirect fashion. In this case the popular vote for provincial electors who were pledged to vote for the Rexist candidates for the upper house was even greater than that cast driectly for the Fascist list of candidates for the lower house.

The declared program as announced by leader Degrelle disclaims any wish for dictatorial powers such as are held by Chancellor Hitler and Premier Mussolini. The program does include such typical Fascist devices as a reform of the government to include reduction of the number of seats in the Parliament, the setting up of a corporate body to function concurrently with the Parliament and the control of large-scale capitalism in the interests of the small farmer and business man. The remainder of the program is vague in the usual fashion of Fascist movements and is subject to immediate change as expediency directs. Degrelle would want the Belgian people to give him a ten- or twenty-year lease of power so that he might carry out the terms of his platform.

There has been surprisingly little indication of the social unrest in Belgium which, ordinarily, finds its outlet in Fascism. On March 25, 1935. Paul Van Zeeland became Premier with the support of a coalition of the Catholic (with which is associated the Christian Democratic) Liberal and Socialist Parties. A flight of capital had begun in 1934 and continued with dangerous effect in 1935. Van Zeeland was called from his position as vice-governor of the Bank of Belgium to lead the country in its efforts to mend the economic system.

The new Premier, who was nominally a member of the Catholic Party, secured from Parliament the privilege of governing by decree and introduced strong methods to safeguard the currency, relieve unemployment, and balance the budget. The currency was devalued by 28 per cent, bond issues were converted to a lower rate of interest with an estimated saving o f650,000,000 francs on debt service each year, a program of public works was began, and mortgage relief was granted to individual property holders.

The results were considerable. The flight of capital stopped with the return of confidence in the Government by the wealthy. The budget was balanced, trade picked up and unemployment was reduced by 30 per cent.

Nevertheless, when given the opportunity at the polls the Belgian people rebuked the Coalition Government and increased Communist representation in the Parliament from three to nine, Flemish Nationalist representation from eight to nineteen, and gave the Rexists twenty-one where they had none before.

Belgians themselves were surprised at the election results and attributed them to a desire to warn the old parties which had been in power so long that they had grown unresponsive to the demands of the voters. The feeling was that a vote for the extremists was not dangerous because they would lack the necessary parliamentary majority to take power. At the same time the older, democratic parties would take heed of the protest and purge themselves voluntarily of venal officials and bureaucratic habits.

Of course many who voted Rex were influenced by the dynamic young Leon Degrelle, leader of the party. Degrelle, while not of the same stature as Mussolini or Hitler, is a strong orator and possesses an attractive personality. As is the Fascist habit, he makes his principal appeal to the youth of the land.

It is now apparent that the votes cast for him last May were, as many Belgians said at the time, intended chiefly as a rebuke to the "ins." Belgians no doubt have learned from the experience of other countries, however, that dictatorial leaders have a way of turning such rebukes of democratic parties to their own account unless they themselves are rebuked in time. It is hardly possible to misread the forthright expression of Belgian opinion which has now been recorded by ballot against Degrelle and fascism.

was equipped with a modern mechanical dishwashing machine," according to the report. "Both machines were typical of those used in first-class restaurants and operating conditions were identical.

"In restaurant B the work was carefully done. In restaurant A less care was taken on the part of the washman. But in both restaurants, in spite of marked differences in conditions, brighter, cleaner dishes were secured with the new compound.

Cement in Color

Dr. Dean S. Hubbell, also of the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, reports in "Industrial and Engineeding Chemistry" a new cementing material resembling the natural mineral atacamite, which promises wide usefulness in the building arts.

Suitable for cementing composition floors, stucco, tiles, cement and other building parts, the new adhesive consists of magnesium oxychloride to which 10 per cent of finely divided copper powder has been added. Unusual properties result from this combination of cement and metal. Great strength and resistance to wear is obtained, damage by water prevented, expansion eliminated and surface changes reduced.

In particular it imparts non-skid properties to cement walks when trowled onto the smooth surface. Adhesion to concrete and resistance to wear and water was demonstrated by the perfect condition of the walk after seven months of constant waiting during which time 250,000 people walked over it. The compositions are colored blue green by the artificial atacamite which follows reaction of the copper with the magnesium oxychloride. The addition of twelve-hundredths of a percent of iron oxide (iron rust) changes the color to stone gray. Blues, reds, browns, and blacks, may be obtained by using the proper pigments to obscure the blue green.

Prevention of Wood Warping

In checking the natural warping of wood cheaply, Dr. Alfred J. Stamm and L. A. Hansen of the United States forest products laboratory have accomplished a feat chemists have been attempting for years. Although wood is remarkable among natural materials in exhibiting a minimum of shrinking and swelling, the change of dimensions with changes of moisture content nevertheless constitute wood's most detrimental property. Even when wood is properly seasoned in dry weather, floor cracks appear, and in moist seasons, doors, windows and drawers stick.

At the last meeting of the society in Pittsburgh, a treatment of wood with synthetic resin-forming materials was described, but unfortunately, in its present form, this method is too expensive for anything but specialties such as sholasts, brush backs, wooden bearings athletic goods, and musical instruments. Cheaper means of minimizing the dimension changes of wood were therefore sought.

Dr. Stamm finds that excessive heating of dry wood for a few hours at temperatures of 165 to 260 degrees centigrade in dry cases will reduce subsequent swelling and shrinking by some 30 to 40 per cent. Soaking of the specimens in water after heating and then again drying, only slightly reduced the initial effect of heating. All of which indicates that the effect due to heating is quite permanent.

To Observe Eclipse

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

LIMA, Peru, May 10.—Dr. Issei Yamamoto, professor of the Tokyo Imperial University, arrived here today en route to Huarez, approximately 200 miles north of here, from which point he will view the total solar eclipse which will come on June 8. Dr. Yamamoto arrived at Callao earlier today aboard the Japanese liner Rakyo Maru.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

Where, Oh Where?

The management of Sunset Pier in Santa Monica is concerned now about the disappearance of a hitherto trusted and dependable employe.

The missing employe—his name is Sam Arterial Johnson—is probably thoroughly satisfied to stay away from a job which offers such intimate contact with silver handled coffins.

And the whole blame for Sam's sudden and not illogical disappearance from the position of pier night watchman, it is believed, can be laid upon Reggie Smith, in charge of properties for Columbia's picture tentatively titled "Find The Witness" with Charles Quigley and Rosalind Keith in the leading roles.

The property coffins, for use in a sequence in which Henry Mollison, as a magician, submerges himself in a casket under the sea, were genuine, water-proof affairs. They were extremely heavy. When, on location at Santa Monica, the coffin scenes were not completed in one day, property man Smith left the caskets on the pier end. He was told that the colored night watchman, Sam, would keep a careful eye upon the valuable caskets.

The caskets were there the next morning. But Sam Arterial Johnson, the night watchman, had disappeared. The theory suggested was that Sam, probably superstitious, had suddenly come upon the coffins unexpectedly during the night—and had made a sudden departure.

Chinese Coronation Envoys Deny Loan

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

LONDON, May 11—Declaring that absolutely nothing definite has yet been mooted, the Chinese delegation to the Coronation of King George VI, headed by Finance Minister Dr. H. H. Kung, today derided a report published by a Japanese newspaper alleging that the delegation approached financial circles here for a loan of £20,000,000 sterling.

It is meanwhile learned that Sir Frederick Maze, inspector-general of the Chinese maritime customs, who accompanied the Chinese delegates to London, has gone to Belfast, Ireland, for a few days.

Meanwhile, the Chinese Ambassador here, Mr. Quo Tai Chi, declared that any information regarding the flotation of a £20,000,000 foreign loan to Nanking was groundless. He did not, however, categorically deny that any negotiations for such a loan might not take place, adding that he was not informed of such negotiations.

Recipe

Build yourself a strong-box,
Fashion each part with care,
Fit it with hasp and padlock,
Put all your troubles there.
Hide therein all your failures
As each bitter cup you quaff,
Lock all your heartaches within it,
Then sit on the lid and laugh.

where be exposed to the weather, since selenium oxychloride is a very powerful oxidizing agent.

Ate Through Laboratory Floor

"Once some of it froze overnight, broke its containers and dripped on the wooden floor of one of the laboratories at the institute, and it ate right through and dripped down into a physics laboratory below. The selenium oxychloride destroyed several instruments in the physics laboratory and even attacked bakelite fixtures.

"In a selenium oxychloride world the temperate zones would be studded with huge glaciers of white crystals, owing to the high freezing point of the substance. Animals would have to have glass-lined stomachs to drink the stuff."

A new binder for making briquets out of coal dust, asserted to overcome objections to present binders, and to make possible the conversion of about 3,000,000 tons of anthracite dust in Pennsylvania into good anthracite coal at a lower cost than the present price of egg coal, was reported by Dr. Foster D. Snell of New York City.

The new binder, made by the solution of silicic acid gel in sodium silicate, holds the coal particles together, Dr. Snell stated, and yields a briquet stronger than the coal itself. He said the briquets could be put on the market at a price at least $2 a ton cheaper than the standard price of nut coal.

Medals Sprout In Soviet Wave Of Patriotism

By JOSEPH BARNES

MOSCOW, March 28.—When Nikolai Lenin used the hammer and sickle seal of the Soviet Union for the first time, on July 26, 1918, it was on a personal letter to the German Communist, Clara Zetkin, in which he had written: "We are now living through the worst weeks of the whole revolution." When the Soviet Union adopted a new seal this spring, it was with a confidence and pride that Lenin did not live to know, but with something of his own shrewd knowledge of the political value of symbols.

The value of the seal to Soviet leaders, like that of most of the medals, insignia and badges which have been sprouting from Russian lapels recently, is no less real than it was nineteen years ago. But the new symbols are also tokens of legitimate pride. They are a recognition of the coming of age of the Soviet Union. Behind them is a deliberate attempt to capitalize, and to turn to greater effort for industrial construction and national defense, the patriotism—part Russian, part Communist—which has swept across this country on the twentieth anniversary of its revolution.

In the new seal, adopted last December in the U. S. S. R. Constitution, but only now officially designed and reproduced, the hammer and sickle embrace a terrestrial globe suspended over an effulgent rising sun. This cosmic whole is surrounded by garlands of wheat and crowned with the Soviet five-pointed star.

Motto's Appeal Limited

For Trotzkyists, who believe the Soviet zeal for world revolution has chilled, there may be significance in the repetition of the Communist motto: "Workers of the World, United," only in the languages spoken inside the Soviet Union. But for loyal Communists, if they need such subtle comfort, there is reassurance in the generous span with which the hammer and sickle pictured on the globe, embrace all Africa and Europe to the North Pole and most of Asia.

Compared to Germany and Poland, the Soviet Union is poor in braid and uniforms. Official Communist eyebrows have been raised in proletarian disapproval of regimented dress, as when the vogue for dark, semi-military blouses and visored caps—Joseph Stalin's working costume—was stopped by nothing less than a decree of the Council of People's Commissars. But medals and insignia of merit have always been in favor, and the outburst of patriotism following the adoption of the new constitution and symbolized by the new state seal has considerably brightened the former drab appearance of a Moscow crowd.

Where badges a few years ago were comparatively rare, and showed only the sport club or society to which the wearer belonged, it is not infrequent now to see a man or woman on the streets of Moscow with four or five medals constituting a kind of passport of skill and knowledge. Besides the "orders" granted by the Soviet state, such as "Soviet Hero" or "Order of Lenin," which carry with them social esteem comparable to that of the French Legion of Honor insignia, the new badges include testimonials that the wearer is a good sportsman, a parachute jumper, an Alpinist, or simply one who can put on a gas mask in less than the five-second norm.

These norms have been made official in recent months, with degrees of proficiency in a dozen skills each symbolized by a different badge. The two most common are GTO (Prepared for Labor and Defense) and RVKO (Prepared for Air and Chemical Defense). Both children and adults in Moscow are thoroughly familiar with the requirements.

Many Badges Military

Many of the badges have a military significance, such as the Voroshilov sharpshooter medals, the more gaudy of which require proficiency not only with a rifle but with a machine gun, or the G. S. O. (prepared for sanitary defense) medals awarded to girls who have had training as nurses for war services.

An unofficial count recently on Sverdlov Square in Moscow, fronting the Bolshoi Theater, showed one in eighteen Muscovites wearing the open parachute badge given only to those who have completed a parachute jump from an airplane. Hanging from the parachute is a small disc with a number to indicate the number of jumps.

Political distinctions are still unrecognized by badge or uniform. The "Octobrists," fielding Communists six to twelve years old, wear a small portrait of Lenin and a tiny red star, and "Pioneers", aged twelve to sixteen, tie a red handkerchief around their necks and wear badges with the simple slogan: "Be Prepared." But only an experienced eye can distinguish Communist party members from others on the street and the growing preference for Western shirts and neckties instead of the traditional Russian "rubashka" has tended to blur all distinctions of dress.

Airlines Honored By Safety Council

N. Y. Times

NEW YORK, April 15.—Medals were awarded last night by the National Safety Council to three American airlines which, in more than 125,000,000 passenger miles of operation, never have incurred the death of a passenger.

The awards were made at a dinner at the Hotel Astor, in connection with the annual convention of the Greater New York Safety Council and cooperating agencies, by Lew R. Palmer, past president of the national organization.

The prize for domestic airlines operating more than 50,000,000 passenger miles annually was given to the Eastern Air Lines. It was received in the company's behalf by Captain Edward Rickenbacker, general manager. According to the award, the company has had no passenger fatality in six years of operation from 1930 to 1936, in which time its planes have covered 141,794,894 passenger miles. This feat, it was announced, has been adjudged by the United States Department of Commerce as the best by any such line to date.

Other Awards Announced

Northwest Airlines, Inc., received the award for domestic lines operating less than 50,000,000 passenger miles yearly. Between 1927 and 1936 its planes operated over 48,768,411 miles without a passenger fatality. Croll Hunter, vice president and general manager, accepted the council's medal.

A special award was made to the Pennsylvania Central Airlines, which has had no passenger or crew fatality in its recorded period of operation from 1930 to 1936. Its planes have flown 36,177,210 passenger miles. The award was received by J. H. Neale, general superintendent.

John Stilwell, vice president of the Greater New York Safety Council, presided at the dinner. Presentation of airline awards, made last night for the first time, is expected henceforth to be an annual function, it was announced.

Other awards were made to eight companies using commercial vehicles on the basis of miles traveled per accident and to twenty-seven others on the basis of hours traveled per accident. These presentations were made by Robert S. Elberty, chairman of the contest committee of the council. The Presidents' Medals of the National Safety Council were presented by Dr. Cassius H. Watson, president of the organization, to thirteen individuals who in 1936 saved lives by applying the Schaeffer method of resuscitation.

The dinner followed fourteen sessions of the council's convention yesterday at which groups of the 7,000 delegates discussed safety measures in the air, at sea, in schools, on the highways and in industry.

In the marine section, Colonel J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, told the delegates American ships were the safest in the world and that such disasters as the fatal fire aboard the Morro Castle would become virtually impossible when present government regulations had been fully met.

Communist Activities at Sea

Instructions to Communist agents to work secretly within the merchant marine were revealed by Charles H. C. Pearsall, president of the Colombian Steamship Company.

While voicing a personal belief that communism was "remote" in the United States, Mr. Pearsall added:

"One cannot be sure, for the agents of the Communist party are cautioned not to proclaim their allegiance to the party's principles. Recently I was given a copy of the instructions issued by the Communist headquarters to its agents working aboard ships.

"Warning its agents to make certain that union work is carried on in the correct manner, the instructions state, however: 'We must not function only as a progressive union group. . . . We are revolutionary workers preparing for the decisive struggle to end capitalism.' Agents are instructed to hold regular meetings but not to expose the party as such. The first task of the agent aboard any ship to select a common grievance for the purpose of mobilizing the crew.

"'Every ship,' says the instruction leaflet, 'must become a stronghold for our party' and agents are informed how to go about the formation of a group."

Before the construction section of the convention, Henry D. Sayer, manager of the casualty department of the Association of Casualty and Surety Executives, warned that increasing costs of the workmen's compensation system might unintentionally be made an instrument for the destruction of industry.

Reasons for such increased costs, he declared, were the inclusion within the compensation laws of such ailments as rheumatism, arthritis, tuberculosis or heart disease, "pre-existing and merely aggravated by the normal incidents of work; and the failure of the law in some cases to fix a time limit within which the employer is liable for employe injuries."

"Compensation is now reaching far over into the fields of general health, old age, life and unemployment insurance," he said. "It begins to take on the aspects of social security, wholly at the expense of the employer, although we know that in many cases the fault of the injured person stands out like a sore thumb."

Italian Adviser Stefani Leaves For Taiyuan

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

PEIPING, May 13.—Concluding a series of conversations with local industrial as well as political leaders, Mr. Alberti de Stefani, high Italian financial adviser to the Nanking Government, left for Taiyuan, capital of Shansi Province, this morning by plane, accompanied by General Chiang Fang-chen and other Nanking officials.

Upon arrival in the Shansi provincial capital, it is reported, the Italian adviser plans to confer with General Yan Hsi-shan, pacification commissioner for the Taiyuan area, and to engage in an investigation of economic conditions of the province. He will then proceed to Hankow via Shihchiachuang to extend his present tour of inspection to central China.

During his four-day sojourn in Peiping, where he arrived last Sunday night, Mr. de Stefani, who once headed the Finance Ministry of the Italian Government, carried out a series of talks with leading statesmen and industrialists, including Mayor General Chin Teh-chun of Peiping, General Feng Chih-an, chairman of the Hopei Provincial Government, and General Pu Chen-hual, chief-of-staff of the Pacification Commissioner's Office for Hopei and Chahar Provinces. He also met Mr. Chow Tso-min, one of the most influential financiers in the north. Mr. de Stefani, however, could not see General Sung Cheh-yuan, chairman of the Hopei-Chahar Political Council, who happened to be staying away from the ancient capital on a trip to Shangtung Province.

YMCA Provides Tolerant Refuge For Nationalities

Christian Science Monitor

PRAGUE.—Much has been heard in recent months concerning the new efforts to establish better understanding between the various nationalities in Czechoslovakia.

The announcement by Premier Milan Hodza of concessions to the minorities in the form of greater participation in the state services and in the use of their own language in official communications, has been described as one of the most important developments in the past 18 years in this republic.

Significant work in establishing a genuine understanding among all sections of the population is being done by a number of religious and cultural institutions.

Founded on American Lines

Among such institutions, the Y. M. C. A. justly deserves a high place. It owes its origin both as regards inspiration and financial help to the United States. It is established on American lines and Brackett Lewis, an American, is at the head of the organization in Prague, at the present time.

Scattered throughout the country are 12 city branches, nine of which have their own buildings, 18 high schools clubs in towns where no Y. M. C. A. exists as yet nine camps with permanent cottage equipment, and student Y. M. C. A. branches in both Prague and Brno (Brunn).

Since the fundamental aim of this institution is to establish better understanding between the various nationalities, they are well represented on the various committees. Included among their number are 71 Czechs, 16 Slovaks, 24 Germans, 7 Magyars and 4 Jews. The same general participation of the various nationalities also extends to the various camps and courses organized throughout the year.

Achievement of Tolerance

Educational and recreational courses of all kinds are organized, so that in the lecture hall, in the gymnasium or on the sports field the basis of tolerance for the other man's point of view is established.

In addition to the Capital, there are Y. M. C. A. branches in Liberec (Reichenberg), Bratislava (Pressburg), Banska Bystrica and Lucenec (Locone).

All of these places are important centers, where the presence of different nationalities, Czech and German or Slovak and Hungarian, supply plenty of opportunity for reconciliation work. Tact and fine sensibilities as well as linguistic and social abilities are required.

That the authorities are alive to the institution's good work may be gathered from the appreciation given by President Benes to officers of the central committee: "The contribution of the Y. M. C. A. to the moral standards of our people, to their intellectual growth, to their faith in our ideals is the greatest contribution it could make in times of stress or of peace. I shall stand by you also in all you do for international relations and understanding which I consider supremely important."

South Africa Bans Foreigners From Three Societies

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, April 20.—The South African action in proclaiming three Southwest Territory organizations, namely the Deutsche Bund, the United National Southwest Africa Party and the Economic League of Southwest Africa, as organizations to which from the first of July no foreigners may belong makes operative Premier J.B.M. Hertzog's decree of April 2 taking powers for such development.

Of these three organizations only the Deutsche Bund is at all concerned with subversive German propaganda, the other two being almost entirely non-German. Premier Hertzog in the Union House Assembly, April 5, said that this propaganda has produced such friction that the Government could not be carried on. He added, however, that the Union Government would do everything possible to act in a friendly manner to Germany. He regretted that the German Minister had handed him a protest note.

It is claimed in South African circles here that since 1919, when the South African Union received a mandate for this previously German colony, circumstances there have changed completely. The white population has grown from 12,000 to 31,600, while immigrants have been overwhelmingly South Africans who have been mainly responsible for the wonderful ranching as well as copper and diamond mining developments effected.

In 1924 all except 262 of the Germans previously in the territory had adopted South African nationality. Only during the past four years—coincident with the arrival of a limited number of new Germans from Europe—has the present agitation arisen.

A similar agitation has been going on also in the ex-German colony of Tanganyika where a number of Germans are reported to have emigrated into the neighboring British colony of Kenya to avoid becoming involved.

Feminists Feel Blum's Cabinet Let Them Down

By SONIA TOMARA

N. Y. Herald Tribune

PARIS, April 7.—French suffragists are bitterly disappointed in Leon Blum's Popular Front government. Although the government has sponsored many reforms during its ten months in power, they point out, it has done nothing for the equal rights movement.

The program of M. Blum's Socialist party includes woman's suffrage, but the Premier has not deemed it timely to tackle the question. The bill, it is true, has passed through the Chamber, where it obtained a sweeping majority of 500 vote, with no opposition and only twenty-three abstentions. But the Chamber had voted for women's suffrage previously. It is the Senate that refuses even to consider the matter, sending the bill back to the archives.

M. Blum, feminists say, could very well have urged the Senators to have a debate on the women's bill. If they had, it would have been difficult for them not to adopt it. Women vote even in Turkey, while in France, which takes pride in being the main champion of democracy, more than half the population is deprived of political rights, they complain. But apparently M. Blum is afraid of displeasing the Senators. It is possible that if he did press the women's suffrage bill through the Senate, Senators would keep a grude against him, and overthrow him on some other question.

Some Gains Won

To show that they are not such stanch enemies of womanhood as they are portrayed to be, the Senators have in fact approved a change in the French civil code regarding married women. They have admitted that married women are not altogether "incapable" before the law, which means that they have allowed married women to appear before the courts to defend their own interests and to receive passports without the husband's permission. But the conscript fathers have insisted on including the words, "the husband is the chief of the family," and they permitted the huband to enforce his veto to his wife's desire of having a profession.

The debate in the Senate was indeed characteristic of the Senators' views—it could be said, of Frenchmen's views in general. Senator Rene Renoult, former Minister of Justice, who proposed to consider women "capable" before justice, solemnly declared: "It cannot be contested that the husband must remain the chief of the family," and he suggested that the husband, not the wife, should have the right of choosing where the family would live.

The Senators Agreed

The Senate indorsed this suggestion. M. Maurice Violette, Minister of State, who tried timidly to maintain that the actual chief of the family was the member who had more personality, and sometimes happened to be the wife, was ridiculed and accused of having been influenced by feminists.

Whereupon a Senator declared that it was the husband's right, not the wife's, to decide whether the family was to go to the seashore or to the mountains for a holiday, and the whole assembly agreed.

The modifications of a wife's civil status still are to go before the Chamber and, if agreed on there, they will enter French legislation. Some progress will then have been achieved. Until the Senate passes changing the "matrimonial regime" of married women, the latter still may not manage their own fortunes another amendment to the civil code unless they have been far-sighted enough to ask for "separation of fortunes" at the time of marriage.

Spanish Civil War Will End Through Exhaustion Rather Than By Definite Victory

Noted Correspondent Of United Press Recounts Harrowing Experiences; Tells How Cable Query Nearly Caused Him His Life

Spain's civil war will eventually end through exhaustion and collapse of morale of either contender, rather than by any definite victory in the field, in the opinion of Webb Miller, United Press war correspondent.

Mr. Miller stated this view in his broadcast address on his Spanish experience recently before the A.S.N.E. in Washington.

"There are so many unforeseeable factors that I would hesitate to predict which side will collapse first, but I should not be much surprised if the war were still going on this autumn," he continued. "The passions aroused are so bitter and the issues are so fundamental, that I believe there can be no question of termination of the war by compromise or negotiation.

"In the last twenty-one years I have seen something of six wars, but none, not even the World War, was so ghastly and horrible. In Spain you have three wars rolled into one—it is a political war, an economic war, and has elements of a religious war. The result is a war of unparalleled ferocity.

"One of the sickening phases of the Spanish war is the wide development of the use of terrorism as a definite weapon just like bullets, shells, starvation, and propaganda. Terrism of civilian populations by indiscriminate bombing from the air has largely wiped out the old distinctions between combatants and non-combatants. Among the dead and wounded on both sides are many thousands of women and children. When I was in Oviedo, a town of 70,000 people, which had been completely surrounded and closely besieged for 90 days, I often saw children running around the streets wearing bandages on wounds from bombs. In the three months of the siege, there had been more than 100 air raids. In a single day 1,910 bombs were dropped. Up to the time I was there, 600 non-combatants, including hundreds of women and children, had been killed in Oviedo."

Horror greeted Mr. Miller within a few hours of his arrival in Spain.

Incident after incident he narrated of wholesale executions by machine guns and hand grenades, of bodies torn and swollen, unburied weeks after death. Eventually, in the area around Talavera, the corpses were gathered into huge heaps, soaked with gasoline and burned—a story which Miller worked past the censorship after many futile attempts.

"I covered the last phases of Franco's drive upon Toledo and entered Toledo and the Alcazar with Gen. Franco," he went on. "As we entered the town about mid-day on Sept. 29, columns of thick smoke rose from burning buildings. San Juan Hospital, just outside the city, was burning fiercely and the smoke bore the stench of burning flesh. There was much mystery about exactly what happened at San Juan Hospital, but the fact remains that several hundred wounded men were burned to death there.

"We entered through the famous well-named 'Gate of Blood.' Inside the gate lay crumpled bodies covered with dust, thrown up by passing motor trucks. Other bodies with hands wired together lay in a jumble at the foot of a parapet, apparently having been tossed over after being executed.

"The principal square, beside the Alcazar, was littered with debris interspersed with dead horses and mules.

"Stumbling in single file behind Gen. Franco, we clambered over the vast hillock of broken rubble which had been the northern end of the Alcazar. Hundreds of gaunt bearded men, their dazed eyes staring vacantly, their faces the color of old parchment, their hair and beards matted with the dust of pulverized stone, set up a wavering cheer. Their tattered earth-colored uniforms hung on emaciated bodies. Women in dresses stiff with dirt, their snarled hair like tangled strings, wept hysterically.

"Listless half-starved children stared silently. The stink of unwashed bodies, and worse, filled the air. Gen. Franco embarced Col. Moscardo, tall, stooped and careworn, his uniform caked with dust, stood with tears streaming down his unkempt beard.

"After the ceremony, we picked our way through the debris, in which were strewn priceless books from the library, many pierced by bullets and stained with blood. Medieval paintings torn by bullets and shells lay in the debris. One painting of a general had a big splash of fresh blood across the face, although it hung ten feet above the floor.

"In the dark tunnel-like passages 100 feet below where the survivors had lived, lighted only by dim flickering candles of mule fat, the scene resembled an illustration for Dante's Inferno. Here 1,670 men, women and children had worked, slept and eaten during 70 days. Except for a narrow runway down the middle, the floor was covered with pallets. Haggard and wizened women and children still lay inert on mattresses, empty burlap sacking, and piles of old historic uniforms from the museum. Many were too weak to sit upright. Others sat silently clasping their emaciated children who wailed in fright. Everyone in this nightmarish dungeon was the color of mushrooms grown in dark places. The tunnel had almost no ventilation so that the fetid air gagged you. A tall hollow-eyed officer stood proudly beside a little emaciated woman dressed in an old bathrobe, sitting on a heap of old uniforms, nursing a tiny baby born only a few weeks before in this dungeon during the siege.

"Reynolds Packard and I talked down there to one young man, Lieut. Thomas Cachina, a young cadet with bloodshot, sunken eyes staring out of a face about the color of waxed paper. He said, 'What kept us alive during this siege were the 97 horses and 27 mules that were in the Alcazar. We ate all of them except one horse and we saved him because he was fine stallion, and we saved him until the last hoping we would be relieved. We didn't want to kill him because he was such a nice horse.' And there were 27 mules that they hadn't eaten yet, and when they were gone they would have been finished.

"He said, 'We rushed up there with even the heads and made soup of them.' They used the fat for making candles for illumination down in the dungeons. For the last 27 days, we had been rationed on one quart of water a day and that is why we look as we do, we couldn't wash. The most terrible days were when we heard the sounds of drills driving the mines underneath the Alcazar. We knew what they were doing, because they shouted repeatedly through megaphones, telling us what they were doing and of the progress, and that unless we surrendered we would eventually all be blown to bits'.

"'When the mines finally blew up, most of us were stunned, and 30 were killed immediately. One man committed suicide immediately and two others later.' For minutes they had to lie on the floors breathing through cloth because of the thick dust and gas. Then finally when it cleared enough so they could jump up, they ran up to the court yard, they had to fight off the attack which they knew would be coming just as soon as the gas and smoke cleared up enough.

"He said, 'We rushed up there with hand grenades and machine guns and fought them off. The place was carpeted with wounded and dead down from the top of the courtroom.'

"He was only about 25 years old, but his face had deep lines just as they all had deep lines in their faces, and they were about the color of paper, wet paper, or wax paper. He said that they had a million rounds of ammunition in the Alcazar, and they had used about 6,000 rounds in the defense. The Government in that time had fired 11,800 shell into the Alcazar, and about 4,000 hand grenades, 500 air bombs, and dropped a number of big canisters of gasoline attached to hand grenades to try to set them afire.

"While we were going around this place, I got separated, because the place was a mess, and there was so much milling around of these people who were still down there. They had no place to go yet, and they were carrying out some of the men from the dungeons on stretchers, taking them to hospitals. I got out at another entrance, which was rather lucky for me because I wandered around trying to find my way back through these tortuous streets to the main square and that way I think I saw some few things that some of the others didn't see.

"There had apparently been a great deal of execution taking place in the interval between the time they entered the town and when they let us in. Understand they didn't let us in for 41 hours after the first elements of Franco's people dropped into the town.

"I suppose I must have seen a hundred red places where somebody had just been killed. This was away from the fighting zone, you know. These were executions, bumping off—a big blob of blood this big, quite fresh. There would be tracks in either direction through the blood.

"Even at the cathedral, right on the side of the door, the left-hand side of the door as you went into the main entrance of the cathedral, there was a great splash of blood and later I found out how that got there: one of the priests was executed there, according to the canon of the cathedral whom I found later.

"We were I suppose about four hours in Toledo on that first trip, and then we had to rush back about 50 miles to Talvera to write out stuff and get it censored. Incidentally, it might amuse you, in my story I used the translation of the name of that gate, 'The Bloody Gate.'

"But the censor cut out the word 'bloody.' He wasn't going to have any blood about Toledo.

"The next day an AP man and I went back; we were the only ones who went in on that second day, and then we went on to some more things which hadn't developed on the first day. The hospital was still burning, and as we crossed the city there was another great fire going on out toward the south end of the town, so we went right over there. It was the seminary, quite a nice building about four stories high, and we stood there a while watching the fire burning these marvelous old paintings and chandeliers—we could see them cracking—and the velvet hangings. It had been a beautiful place.

"We noticed the civil guards were watching the doors rather intently and it didn't occur to us that there was any significance about it. We went over later and saw Gen. Varella at his headquarters. We asked, 'Is everything finished here?'

"He said, 'Not quite; there are still some of them in there. We discovered this morning that there are 40 anarchists in the cellar of the seminary. We had them surrounded, so they got drunk and they shouted their war cry and set fire to the seminary and they are all burning to death or have burned to death down in the cellar.'

"Of course, later old General Deliano broadcast a little different version of it from Seville, so I don't know who was right. Deliano said that they found these 40 anarchists and they had given them a dose of hand grenades down in the cellar, which had set fire to the seminary.

"I want to tell you about an incident which interested me, at least, and it may throw a little light on the way things go down there. It is the incident of my arrest which happened while I was writing my first story. I had been out on the Guadarrama Front, and had come back later in the evening to Talavera. I had a little room in the hotel, with no chair in it, and I was kneeling on the floor writing on the typewriter which I put on the bed because there was no other furniture in the room. The door was shoved open and a couple of very surly looking civil guards came in—and they are pretty mean any place in Spain. The said, 'Your papers!'

"I pulled out my passport and my passes, which happened to be in order, and they looked at them and shoved them in their pockets. They said, 'Where is your baggage?' I pointed it out. I had just a handbag, with some stationery, papers and a change of underwear and a few things like that, and toilet materials, and they turned it out on the bed and started going through it. They went through it carefully, looked at every scrap of writing I had. I had some personal papers there, including three or four good telephone numbers in New York and one or two in Washington. They opened the little envelopes with my razor blades and then they took a razor blade and slit the lining of the bag. I kept asking them, 'What is the matter, what is this?' I couldn't speak Spanish very well but enough to make them understand, and they wouldn't tell me. Finally they said, 'Come on, you are under arrest.'

"They took me out. We got outside the hotel in the dark, because the town was in darkness on account of air raids. I insisted that they take me to the military headquarters because I had heard that there was a new press officer there, and he would get me out of this, that this was a misunderstanding. Finally they did take me to the commandant's quarters, and here was the press officer, a nice young fellow who spoke English and who had been in the legation at Lisbon. I started telling him my story and he was listening quite politely and nicely and I thought I was getting along all right, when one of these civil guards showed him a paper, whereupon he suddenly drew up and got very tough and said, 'This is serious. You are under arrest and you must go.'

I said, 'But what is it? It can't be anything very serious, my papers are in order, I haven't sent a story yet, here is what I was writing, what can this be?'

"'Well, I can't tell you but you must go and there will be an investigation, and if you are innocent you will be freed.'

"I started to argue with him a little. I said, 'Let me then cable my London office and say I am under arrest.'

"'No.'

"'Let me cable and say they won't be hearing from me for a day or two, maybe.'

"'No.'

"'I haven't had anything to eat all day'—which was perfectly true. I said, 'Let them take me to a restaurant here so I can get a little food before I go to jail.'

"'No.'

"Then he got pretty tough and he said, 'Take him.' They grabbed me by the arms and took me out into the street. The fellows formed a group around me again. Luckily the New York Times correspondent came in just then. He knew that I was under arrest, but he didn't know what it was about. We started to march away and I saw in the light Capt. Agradero, who was probably the sole man in all Spain who could have fixed this thing up, and one of the few that I knew in that army. He just happened to appear in the light, going into the doorway, and I yelled my name and said, 'I am under arrest.' I didn't know whether he heard me or not.

"Well, we got down to the civil guard quarters and they put me in a squad room first. Some of these fellows gathered around me, there were about a dozen civil guards in there, and one fellow came up and said something, rubbing his finger across his throat in the manner of a knife. Then another fellow came up and said, 'Do you speak Spanish?'

"I said, 'I learned it in Mexico 20 years ago but I have forgotten.'

"He said, 'He is a Mexican.' Of course, the Mexicans are pretty unpopular, because of furnishing arms to the other side. I hastily explained I was not a Mexican. Finally one of them gave me a cigarette. Another who spoke French talked to me. About two hours went by, and then Agradero came in. He was gone about an hour in the interior of the building and then he came out and called me in and said, 'There has been a misunderstanding. Your London office sent you a cable and it was misunderstood, and orders were given immediately for your arrest. It is all cleared up now. I happened to be able to explain that this was a newspaper inquiry. They couldn't understand. You know the words 'assassinate Gen. Molnar' appeared in that cable to you, and they thought maybe they had better have you arrested immediately. It was rather lucky you saw me, because you know wartime and these civil guards investigate after they have acted.'

"Well, that was all right. I went back and the censor said, 'You must not send anything about this, and even when you go out to the frontier you must send nothing about this incident.'

"I waited until I got to the frontier and sent it eventually, but about three weeks later I began to get a little light on this thing. It seems there had been a plot to assassinate Gen. Molnar a few weeks before, or at least they thought there was, and they had caught a man who called himself a newspaper man named Noyman. I learned later what the telegram said. It said, 'Plot assassinate Gen. Molnar. How?' This had come from the London office and they snapped it up. Of course I never got the message.

"You might be interested in the censorship, which I can only talk about from the Franco side, of course. I know pretty much about the other side. I talked to our men in Madrid on the telephone. It is just about the same as any other war. Some of them are stupid, and sometimes if you are careful you can wangle your stuff through. I tried twice to send the story about the burning of the bodies on the battlefield and each time they cut it out because I think they thought it would offend the religious susceptibilities abroad. Finally I found one of these fellows who incidentally didn't read English as well as spoke it, and so I slipped in just one line down in the dispatch about some-thing else, and I said, "Saw six heaps ashes human debris battlefield." I thought that might fool him and it did. He didn't get it through his head that this referred to the burning of human bodies, so he passed it. You can't do that very often, but you can get away with it sometimes.

"In Madrid they are on the 'phone to our London office three or four times a day, sometimes 20 or 30 minutes at a time. Now we can even ask them questions. Up to three or four months ago, you were allowed to dictate but you couldn't interrupt them or ask them questions. They have been getting more and more lenient, and now we talk to them and ask them questions, and you can hear the shells exploding over the telephone. We take the stuff on a dictaphone device, and we have a number of records which have the sounds of shells exploding somewhere around the telephone building. Sometimes the fellows say, 'Do you hear that one?' and there it is on the record.

"I want to tell you something more about my trip into Oviedo. Packard and I are the only men who have ever yet been into Oviedo. This fighting around Oviedo has never been publicized very much in the United States.

"We heard that Oviedo was relieved and it was, to a certain extent. We got within about 35 miles of the city at a headquarters, and said that we wanted to go into Oviedo. They didn't seem to be very enthusiastic about it." After signing releases freeing the Nationalist Government from responsibility for any harm they might suffer, they were allowed to go on.

"They said, 'You can start out tomorrow morning. At Escamplero you will have to leave your car and go in with some troops, because there is still firing on the road.'

"So we went with our faithful Ricardo, who had been through some pretty hot affairs. We drove up to Escamplero. When we got near, there was quite a lot of sniping. Maybe two or three or four times a minute there would be a rifle shot here and there. Ricardo began to get cold feet. This shooting annoyed him very much, and he said no, he was not going to wait.

"Here we were. There was nothing going on at all in this little village of five or six houses. We got to see the Lieutenant in command and he said, 'When anything goes in there I will get you on it,' so pretty soon a couple of busloads of soldiers came along. He said, 'You go in one and Packard in the other.' I think we went ahead about a mile when suddenly a terrible fight—when I say 'Terrible,' I never heard so much rifle shooting. The fighting was going on right ahead of us about two miles, dominating the road. Well, the shooting was going on at the rate of maybe four or five hundred rifle shots a minute. It went on for some hours. There was a little artillery and machine gunning. Then some fighting broke out on the right about a mile, and then some shooting on the left, and then some shells began going over our heads, bursting behind about 500 yards, and we got pretty uncomfortable. Here they were on four sides of us, and so were the soldiers.

"We found that they had never been under fire before. These were all young volunteers who had never heard a rifle fired in anger before. They were just about as unhappy as we were. This went on until nearly one o'clock, when it finally died down. We got in, and as we went on a couple of miles we came to a place where the fighting had been, and there were still the dead and wounded lying around. The wounded, some of them, were shouting at us, trying to get our attention, wanting to be picked up, probably. Just beyond that, then, the firing opened on us. Some of the fellows lay down and put their bedding rolls around their heads and some were very badly scared. One fellow was lying with his head on my knee, pretty white and shaky. Luckily they shoot very very badly, because we had only one man killed, and as soon as we got through it they stopped and took him out and dumped him on the side of the road. They didn't carry him into Oviedo.

"We went down, then, to see General Arranda. He gave us as much dope as he could. He had started with 2,000 men at the beginning of the siege; he had 500 men left at the time he was relieved. They had been able in the last day or so to shove in a couple or three hundred more by having them run the gauntlet. He told me that 600 civilians had been killed in the bombing. Some sections were in absolute ruins. I don't know that there is any way that I can ever convey to anybody the fact that except for this little narrow mountain over which we came, this city was surrounded by hills, the hills were all held by the government people, that is, the Austrian miners, and that this situation had been going on for 90 days and is still going on more or less now after nine months, and that they had fighting in the city almost daily. Those fellows would come in on forays and they came in while we were there.

"They cut the road, and we were in there besieged and couldn't get out. So then Arranda said, 'Maybe we can shove one through in the morning.' Four times during the day we got into trucks and each time they decided we had better not.

"Along toward sunset they said, 'Well now, after dark we are going to go, but we are waiting for convoys coming in and we can't pass on that mountain road, so we will have to wait until they get in.' So we sat on the trucks there for about an hour. Pretty soon the convoy came in, abou 30 trucks, with perhaps 35 men in each one, and they had 12 dead and 18 wounded and started unloading them in the square. We started gulping, because we were going to go right through this right away. They came around, the officers, and said, 'Lie down as soon as you get outside of the town, with your feet toward the hill, with your head away, no smoking,' and they turned out all the lights on the trucks and we started to run the gauntlet.

"Of course it was darker and we had an advantage. About two miles outside they would open on us for three or four minutes. I don't know today how many people were hit in our convoy because we don't know what happened to the rest of the convoy.

"A little further on, suddenly our truck stopped and Packard heard the fellow say, 'The gasoline has all run out.' We jumped out and grabbed the tailboard of the truck ahead while it was still moving, and we got out. So we never knew what happened to the rest of that convoy. At Soles we snatched a few hours sleep and some food, and then started on a 24 hours' motor trip to Burgos to file this stuff.

"There was town of 70,000 people that hadn't had any meat for two months. I thought then that if they went on much longer they couldn't last more than a few weeks. What they are like now, God only knows. You could see from their faces the state they were in. Incidentally they had one room and only one bed, so being the boss I got the bed and Packard slept on the floor. During the night they came into the town two or three times. Once they got right in within no less than 400 yards of our hotel and the bullets, about a dozen, hit the side of the hotel and I woke up Packard, sleeping on the floor very heavily, and said, 'What are we going to do?' There wasn't any cellar in the hotel. We had already ascertained that. So we just lay there, and they drove them out. We could hear the running feet. We got up once and looked out—the windows were all blown out—and we could see fellows running about in the darkness. That is still going on. What the state of these people must be, God knows."

Puzzling Lungfish Lives In Mud For Months

Below: Demonstrating how the protective membrane folds into the mouth for a short distance.

The peculiarities of the lungfish have long provided the zoologist with food for thought; and the further investigation which is now being made by research laboratories may result in discoveries of enormous benefit to mankind. Writing in the New York Zoological Society's "Bulletin," Mr. Christopher W. Coates states: "Any living creature so specialized that it apparently defies the operation of laws that govern the majority of animals is certain to be of interest to scientists in many fields. What more fascinating problem for the student of metabolism than the functioning of a fish that during long periods of æstivation consumes muscle tissue instead of stored fat? How can cancer research overlook a fish that abundantly produces melanomas, or colored cancerous growths? And what a find for investigators of the kidney functions—a fish that at certain times permits a concentration of urea in its blood five hundred times greater than would be poisonous for most other vertebrates! . . . Lungfishes are inhabitants of what may, by courtesy, be called fresh water. 'Fresh' water, however, is only a term to distinguish it from salt water, for anything more fetid than some of the waters in which lungfishes have been found is hard to imagine.

A Daughter Speaks Up About Divorce

I came back to mother's apartment last fall, after spending two months with dad. While I was unpacking in the room which is mine half the time and the guest room the other half, I showed mother my divine new evening dress. I think it's the most becoming one I've ever had. She thought so too; I could see her expression in the mirror. But just as she was about to say so, a suspicious look that I know all too well came over her face.

"Did Grace pick that out?" she demanded.

I had to admit that Grace, dad's wife, had been with me when I bought it; I added truthfully, "But I chose it myself. Don't you adore it?"

Mother said, "I should think even Grace would know it's far too old for a girl of 18."

I might have reminded her of the practically identical black net job she almost bought me, but didn't buy only because I was going to dad's before long and it was his duty, she said, to provide my clothes while I was with him. I did not argue, however. If your time is divided between two parents, each of whom has married a second time, you soon learn the futility of argument. I only regretted having told the truth.

"We'll go shopping tomorrow," mother said, "and try to find something that's suitable for you. Grace seems to have as little taste in your clothes as in her own. . .I'm not criticizing her, Joan—when you raise your eyebrows like that you look just like your father!—it probably isn't her fault that she has no sense of what's appropriate. She may have other good qualities which are more important. I hope so, for your sake."

I didn't need to listen to the rest of the record, for I know it by heart. It goes like this: My father and mother are both, thank goodness, civilized people. They had a civilized, friendly divorce. They bear no ill will toward each other, nor toward the person the other married. That's what they say. But—

Last winter, when I went to stay with dad, he asked where I'd got the new fur sports coat. I told him it had been a present from Bill—mother's husband—so the next day dad bought me a second fur sports coat, although I needed an evening wrap more. Due to the same principle, I had two coming out parties. Mother had said she couldn't afford anything but a tea. Then dad and Grace gave a marvelous party for me in the country; so later mother had a dinner dance in town, regardless of cost. Bill urged her to do it, too. He said, "Joan's father isn't going to get away with that," just as if dad had meant my party as a personal affront to Bill.

I honestly think Grace and Bill are genuinely fond of me as an individual. But having a child of a former marriage in a new household is an inconvenience. Even when parents are living peaceably together there are times when they find their offspring a nuisance; and when the blood tie is lacking, these times occur more frequently.

For instance, the year I was 14, mother wanted me to go to boarding school. Dad opposed it, charging in my presence that the reason mother wanted to send me away was so she and Bill could have a freer winter. And his manner made plain that the real reason he was against it was to prevent this freedom.

Nevertheless, I was duly entered, and at the end of September I went to mother's in town to get ready. Mother said I didn't look at all well, but each of my parents always says that when I've been with the other. She was furious when, the day before I was to leave for school, I developed whooping cought—furious at Grace and dad. She acted as if they had deliberately inoculated me with the disease so she would have the trouble of taking care of me.

She did take every possible care of me; she couldn't have been sweeter. Yet I felt terribly in the way because Bill had planned to take her abroad with him on a business trip. Bill urged her to go, anyway; to send me back to dad's to recuperate. Mother refused to do this, and Bill intimated that he occupied a distinctly secondary place in her affections.

He reminded her that she had done more than her share, anyway, in being responsible for me. At the time of the divorce, when I was 11, dad lived in the country and mother in New York. So they decided that it would be better for me to stay at mother's while I was attending school, and spend most of my holidays with dad. Which, as Grace said, meant that she and dad were tied down all summer. And, as Bill pointed out, left mother holding the bag an undue proportion of the time.

After I was in boarding school, my vacations were meticulously halved. And this didn't work very well. For one thing, as I have said, the room which was called mine was used in my absence as a guest room, so when I was there it couldn't be occupied by any other visitor. And visitor is what I actually was, although all four parents would indignantly deny it.

Nothing made me more aware that I wasn't an integral part of either household than Grace's formula for answering invitations. She would say, with more than a hint of nobility, "Joan is staying with us now; unless the dear child has some plans of her own, we wouldn't, of course, want to leave her."

The situation is a little different at mother's. She never dares decline invitations that Bill wants to accept, even though she's promised to do something with me at that time. For Bill's jealousy of the attention she pays me is intensified by his jealousy that earlier marriage, of which I am such a tangible reminder. The occasions when mother gives up some personal pleasure in order to contribute to my pleasure are concealed, if possible, from Bill, just as dad keeps secret from Grace the extra checks he gives me from time to time.

Naturally, I have to play my part in these conspiracies. In fact, the gift of silence is probably the most outstanding trait a child of divorced parents acquires. Sheer self-protection makes me avoid all argument with my stepparents about even the most trivial matters. If I differ with them about even a football game or a movie actor, they are apt to take a superior "grown-up-knows-best" attitude. My real parents dare not take my part; to do so would precipitate a scene of domestic discord, and each tries hard to preserve, before me, the myth that the second marriage is ideally happy.

I learned my lesson early after the America Withdraw

over the whole of Russia during 1919. There were the North Russian army at Archangel, the Northwest Russian army from Esthonia down to the Ukraine country and to Odessa; Denekin (then Wrangel) at the South—in the Crimea—with his White Army and Kolchak in Eastern Siberia with his White Army. The Big Five, deliberating in Paris, decided in that year of 1919 to support Kolchak in Siberia. In fact, all the above efforts had the support of some of the victorious Powers.

The American troops did not evacuate Eastern Siberia until March, 1920. The Japanese troops withdrew from Eastern Transbaikalia in August, 1920. The Japanese troops evacuated the Maritime Provinces of Eastern Siberia as late as October, 1922.

We see, therefore, that when the Nine Great Powers met at Washington in November, 1921, to survey the Far Eastern part of the world these Powers had very little vision as to what the immediate future would show as to conditions in that part of Asia. The Soviet Revolutionary government had set up the provisional Far Eastern Republic in Siberia which was contesting the efforts of the White Russians and of the Japanese and others in Siberia. Although ten years had passed since the revolution in China, there had been evolved no effective government or system of order in China. Following the evacuation of the troops of Japan, the Eastern Republic was dissolved and its territories were merged into the dominions of the Soviet Republics of Great Russia.

Czarist Russia had been for many years pushing into Siberia and into Manchuria. The Trans-Siberian railway was opened in 1897. There were the Treaties—one for twenty-five years and one for some ninety-nine years—which Russia made with China in 1896 to aid China by protecting that country, by building the Chinese Eastern railways and by developing Manchuria. France and Germany shared in this by supplying some of the funds for the new railways.

Russia pushed boldly into Manchuria during and after the Boxer outbreaks in Peking in 1900. The Russo-Japanese Peace Treaty of Portsmouth in 1905—following the gains of the Japanese by hard fighting in Manchuria—merely arrested the penetration of Russia to the southward in Manchuria. The Russian railway system in Manchuria was left intact, though Japan got the Russian rights over the Southern branch from Port Arthur only as far as Changchu.

It is fair to say now that the Nine-Power Treaty to respect the territorial interests of China was a defective instrument, because the Contracting Powers did not know that conditions in the regions about which they were agreeing. These Powers evidently felt that Russia was a country the government of which was much in doubt. They thought so little of the Russian government that they did not ask that government, with its immense interests in the Far East, to attend the Washington Conference. These Nine Great Powers appear to have had little real knowledge of China. They seemed to think that there would soon be in China a government over the whole of Chinese territory. Several of the Nine Powers had behind them the knowledge of their own past futile efforts, singly or in concert, to aid China for more than a half of a century. Everything points to the fact that the Nine-Power Treaty should have been for very short periods of time—made in fact as matters stood then in the Far East as an experimental Treaty.

Japan evidently had then—and the other Powers at the Washington Conference apparently had—no idea or conception of the strength and power which Soviet Russia would soon develop in Siberia—so near to Japan itself. None of the attending Powers at Washington had any idea of what tragedy awaited the people of China under the War Lords. The chaos, wholesale suffering, ruin and mass starvation in China for a generation must be the measure of the character and the capacity of the Chinese rulers. Japan's general control in North China will aid the Chinese. Japan will not send to an already over-crowded land masses of Japanese. But by sending to China a relatively few supervising experts to coordinate China there will be great improvement. All nations will have more trade in China than ever before. When China becomes effective under the tutelage of Japan, I have confidence in the ability of the Chinese to expel Japan from China proper—to become the nemesis of Japan.

South China Wins

for expansion in South China were a "menace to Oriental peace" and even as a "disregard of Japan's position as the chief stabilizing force in the Orient and a threat to the peaceful relations between South China and Japan, particularly considering Formosa."

After investigations here it is definitely learned there is no railway from Canton to Foochow which, if built, would challenge Japan's claim to special interests in Fukien Province. There is no scheme for British financing of a Canton-Kweichow-Yunnan railway.

Likewise Japanese reports of a vast amount of British capital investing in a huge rayon plant in Canton which would threaten Japan's rayon exports in South China is purely a figment of the imagination, as is another Japanese scare over the supposed scheme of British, Chinese-Australian capital to erect huge woolen mills in Canton, using imported Australian wool.

Cemedine Effective Glue

To glue rubber goods to iron, or leather pieces to iron such as cementing straps of leather to the running board of an automobile, Cemedine, genuine home-made paste, has an instant and noticeable effect. It is pure white in color and unlike other pastes, it never fades nor loses its effectiveness. It is also good for mounting photographs.

ENTERTAIN AT LUNCHEON

The Rumanian Minister and Mrs. Stoicesco entertained at an informal farewell luncheon in honor of the British Ambassador and Lady Clive, Monday. The other guests included the American Ambassador and Mrs. Grew, the Canadian Minister and Mrs. Bruce and the British Counsellor and Mrs. Dodds.

NO RECEPTION AT CUBAN LEGATION

The Cuban Legation has announced that there will be no reception at the Legation Thursday May 20 on the occasion of the Cuban National Holiday.

NEW ADDRESS

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Thompson have moved from the Nonomiya Apartments in Kudan to the house formerly occupied by Mr. and Mrs. John K. Emmerson at 34 Kanetomi-cho, Koishikawa.

HOLD ANNUAL MEETING

The International Ladies' Benevolent Association of Tokyo will hold its annual general meeting at the American Club at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday.

TRANSFERRED TO LONDON OFFICE

Mr. Eiichi Kanakura, manager of Yokohama office of The Nippon Yusen Kaisha is promoted and appointed manager of London office of the company and Mr. Kiyoshi Morita, manager of the Singapore office will succeed Mr. Kanakura.

Mr. Kanakura was formerly the chief of the Freight Department of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha in Tokyo and then he was appointed Yokohama office manager, where he has served for about 5 years, during which he has contributed much towards the advance of shipping business and the construction of the present new building of the company.

WEINGARTNERS ENTERTAINED

In honor of Dr. and Mrs. Felix von Weingartner, the two famous musicians now visiting in Japan, a tea party was given by Professor and Mrs. Klaus Pringsheim, at their home in Ushigome, Monday. Among those present were the Swedish Minister, Mr. Vidar Bagge; Viscountess Keiko Kato with her son and daughter; Dom Hildebrand Yaiser; Professor and Mrs. Leo Sirota; Mrs. Elizabeth Hansson; Miss Suye Ogura; Professor Paul Rosenstand; Mr. and Mrs. George Hirose; Mr. Mitsuru Ushiyama; Mr. Tokuji Saisho; Mr. Ginji Yamane; Mr. Takeo Masunaga; Miss Shizuyoko Miyauchi; Mr. Komei Abe; Mr. Shinichi Takarai; Mr. Masaru Yasuda; Mr. Sugahara, and Mr. Hans Erik Pringsheim.

CELEBRATION DINNER FOR MR. SABUROSUKE OKADA

Some 200 leading painters and artists of Tokyo held a celebration dinner in honor of Mr. Saburosuke Okada, professor at the Tokyo Academy of Fine Arts and noted oil painter, at the Marble Restaurant, Marunouchi, at 6 p.m. Monday to congratulate Mr. Okada who has been decorated with the Decoration of Culture some time ago.

ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF JAPAN WATER-COLOR SOCIETY

The annual exhibition of the Japan Water-color Society will be held at the Tokyo Prefectural Art Galleries, Uveno Park, from May 20 until June 6.

MEETINGS OF N. B. R.

The Nippon Bunka Remmei, or Nippon Cultural Federation, will have meetings as mentioned below this week at its Forum in the New Osaka Building, Uchisaiwai-cho near Hibiya, (Room 453). Those who are interested in these meetings are welcome to attend.

Tuesday, May 18, 5 to 6 p.m. Serial lecture by Mr. S. Sutoh on the Japanese sword. The lecture this week will concern the study of sword-guards and other accessories.

Thursday 5 to 7 p.m. Meeting for Occidentals. Mr. Hirata will speak on the subject Observation on the Westernization of Japan.

Friday, 5 to 7 p.m. Meeting for Orientals. Common discussion will be held in the subject A Comparative Study of Celebration of a Birth in the Asiatic Nations.

ENTERTAIN AT IMPERIAL HOTEL

Lieutenant-Colonel and Mrs. Sidney F. Mashbir entertained at dinner at the Imperial Hotel Monday in honor of Prince Iyesato Tokugawa. In addition to Prince Tokugawa the guests included Lieutenant General H. Watari of the General Staff; Major General S. Washidzu, Commandant of the Toyama Military Academy; Major General Kenji Matsumoto, Commanding the First Infantry Brigade of the Imperial Guards Division, and Mrs. Matsumoto; Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Moss and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Tausend of New York.

COLFS' EXHIBITION TO BE HELD OVER UNTIL MAY 20

The one-man show of miniature portraits by Mr. Albert Colfs, noted Beligan artist at the Mitsukoshi Department Store was to be closed on May 17, according to a previous announcement, however the sponsors of the exhibition have decided to hold over until May 20 in answer to the public demand. The exhibition of Mr. Colfs is being visited by many people. Some 50 miniature portraits including some portraits of Japanese prominent persons are being shown.

SECOND LECTURE OF DR. GEORGES BONNEAU

Following the first lecture on the Japanese Thought of classic literature by Dr. Georges Bonneau, his second lecture will be held at the Maison Franco-Japonaise de Tokyo, Surugadai, Kanda, at 5 p.m. today. The lecture will be open to the public.

EXHIBITION OF JAPANESE SWORDS

More than 300 distinguished Japanese old swords will be exhibited at the Japanese Physicians' Hall, Surugadai, Kanda, on May 22 and 23 under the auspices of the Society for the Study of Japanese Swords. Some experts will assist at the show to explain the exhibition to the visitors.

ART EXHIBITION OF THE PARIS-KAI

An art exhibition is being held at the Nichido Art Galleries, Sukiyabashi, Ginza, until May 20 under the auspices of the Paris-Kai. The members of the society are exhibiting their works at the salon. The society had great success at an exhibition at the Sankakudo Art Galleries in Osaka last month.

SMALL EXHIBITION OF SCULPTURAL SOCIETY

A small exhibition of the Sculptural Society of Tokyo will be held at the Takashimaya department store, Nihonbashi, from May 20 to 23. The members of the society are wood-carvers and their recent works will be shown at the salon.

ART AUCTION

A collection of modern and classic Japanese paintings collected by a certain statesman of Tokyo will be auctioned at the Kyoraku Art Club, Sukiyabashi, Ginza, during May 18 to 20.

YOKOHAMA RECEPTION COMMITTEE MEETING

A General Meeting of the Yokohama Reception Committee was held at the Hotel New Grand, Yokohama at 11:00 a.m. today to discuss the ways and means of welcoming 600 delegates of educators from all parts of the world attending the World's Education conference to be held at the Tokyo Imperial University, Tokyo, for 5 days from August 2 to 7.

80 members of the 600 delegates arrived at Yokohama on board the States Steamship liner General Pershing May 13, and another party will arrive at the port city on board the Nippon Yusen Kaisha liner Tatsuta Maru, July 28.

A concrete plan to welcome the party of the delegates was made at the meeting, and will be announced later by the reception authorities.

The Yokohama Reception Committee is as follow:

Chairman of Committee: Mayor Shyuzo Aoki of Yokohama, Advisers; Governor Kiyoshi Nakarai of Kanagawa Prefecture; Fortress Commandant Seikichi Sayagi; Director Mitsuru Motto of the Yokohama Customs House; President Chuichi Ariyoshi of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce and Industry; President Inazo Tajiri of the Yokohama Higher Commercial School; President Tamotsu Toyama of the Yokohama Higher Technical School; Vice-Chairmen; Director Yoshitsuru Nakano of Kanagawa Prefectural General Management Department; Director Kinji Ishii of Kanagawa Prefectural Education Department; Superintendent Kenji Matsuzaki of Yokohama Custom Inspection Department; Deputy mayor Ken Uzawa of Yokohama Municipality; General Manager Kan Sonoda of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Committee members and secretaries; Superintendent Michitaka Omori of Kanagawa Prefectural Educational Affairs Section; Superintendents Jiro Watanabe of Kanagawa Prefectural Foreign Affairs Section; Chief Masuzo Masuda of Yokohama Municipal Educational Association; Chief Jun Koretsu of Yokohama Municipal Educational Section; Chief Matsutaro Mochizuki of Yokohama Chamber of Commerce and Industry Trade Affairs Department; Chief Shota Kasahara of Yokohama Municipal Land-Tourist Section; School-inspectors Fumio Suzuki of Yokohama Municipal Educational Section; Mr. Yozo Nomura and Mrs. Fumi Nomura; President Madame Tei Hayashi of Yokohama Ferris Seminary; President Mrs. Fumi Uji of Yokohama Eiwa Girls School; President Mrs. Yama Shimamura and Vice-president Mrs. Haru Yoshiwara of Yokohama Municipal Girls Educational Association.

TOKYO INTERNATIONAL CLUB

The Tokyo International Club will hold a special meeting on Friday, at Orion, Nishi Ginza, at 7 p.m.

Prof. Jon Svensson of Iceland, the world famous author of children's stories including "A Story of Nonni", and "Adventures of Two Boys," will be the guest of honor that evening. He will speak on "Iceland and My Adventures".

TO GIVE A CHARITY CONCERT

Under the auspices of the Dames de Kojimachi, a charity concert will be given at the Nippon Seinenkai Hall, Aoyama, at 1 p.m., Wednesday. The concert has been proposed by the members of the Association des Dames de Kojimachi in order to raise a fund for the Kojimachi Church. The sponsors are Baron and Baroness de Bassompierre of the Belgian Embassy; the Italian Ambassador, Mr. Giacinto Auriti; the Brazilian Ambassador and Madame Pedro Leao Velloso and the French Ambassador and Madame Arsene Henry.

The program of the concert consists of harp solos by Mrs. Keiko Kato, vocal solos by Mrs. Alexander George, Scotch dances by Mrs. H. A. Macrae of the British Embassy; piano solos by Baroness de Bassompiere and Miss Sonoko Inouye, and Koto music by Miss Toshiko Yonekawa and her company. Tickets are obtainable at the entrance of the hall or at the office of the association (the Belgian Embassy).

Research Traces

cule essentially the same arrangement of atoms as chlorophyll. The metal, however, is not magnesium, but iron. Elimination of this iron by chemical means yields the same type of porphyrins as those obtained by the elimination of magnesium from chlorophyll.

By substituting iron for magnesium, nature seems to have crossed one of the bridges from the plant kingdom to the animal kingdom.

The iron from hemin is also eliminated by acid. Different acids yield different prophyrins from hemin, and each porphyrins can be recognized and identified by its characteristic spectroscopic properties.

It is possible to introduce iron again into the porphyrins and then one obtains porphyrin iron complex salts, artificial hemins, which are spectroscopically very similar to hemin from blood. From the chemical point of view, e. g., for the determination of the structure of the molecule of these compounds, hemins and porphyrins are of equal value and importance.

If one pours blood into hot acetic acid which has been saturated with table salt, one obtains, upon cooling, dark red-brown crystals. The crystallized compound represents the coloring matter of blood in chemical combination with the chlorine of the salt, and is called "hemin." The hemin, as it is prepared by this method, is an artificial product, as the hemoglobin of blood, from which it is formed, does not contain chlorine. This hemin still contains the iron of the red blood corpuscle.

All the porphyrins, both of the blood hemin and of the chlorophyll, have been found to contain in their structures the fundamenal chemical ring system, composed of twenty atoms of carbon, fourteen atoms of hydrogen and four atoms of nitrogen. This fundamental ring is called "porphin."

Rothemund's Research on Porphin

The synthesis of porphin was first accomplished by Dr. Rothemund. He also introduced magnesium into porphin, thus preparing porphin phyllin, the simplest compound known of chlorophyll-like structure.

The simplest hemin possible, porphin hemin, was also synthesized, Dr. Rothemund reported. The synthesis of these two materials of life was based on the combination of a compound known as pyrrole with formaldehyde, the substance believed to play such an important role in the process in which chlorophyll makes it possible for the plant to harness the sun's energy for the building of its tissues out of water and carbon dioxide from the air.

A pyrrole is a cyclic compound with four carbon atoms and one nitrogen atom in the "ring," and with hydrogen atoms attached to each of the ring atoms.

Pyrrole and another aldehyde may be combined, Dr. Rothemund reported, and a porphyrin different from porphin will result. The new porphyrin synthesis has been applied to fourteen different aldehydes. From each of these new porphyrins, its magnesium salt, or phyllin, was prepared and these were used in a comparative study with chlorophyll from the leaves.

From these fundamental building blocks, Dr. Rothemund went on to build the more complicated patterns, until at last he reached the half-way mark.

At the halfway stage are compounds known as di-pyrrl methenes. These contain two pyrrole rings in their molecule, whereas the more complex porphyrins, hemin and chlorophyll, contains four pyrrole rings.

Spain Proving A Short War Is Impossible

By ANNE O'HARE McCORMICK

N. Y. Times

Early in March it was being said in official circles in London and Paris that the longer the Spanish war lasted the less likely it was to spread and the less imminent was the danger of any other European war. That statesmen like M. Blum, Mr. Eden and Dr. Benes bracketed the long-drawn-out struggle in Spain with British rearmament as a factor for peace sounded a bit fantastic, but their argument was based on the belief that besides smashing many illusions about modern warfare the rock of Spain was demonstrating, spectacularly and beyond a doubt, that a short war is impossible. Therefore, ran the reasoning, any power or powers thinking of war in terms of a sudden thrust and a quick victory would hesitate after this object-lesson to start something which they lack the means to carry through.

If this argument was sound in March, when the Insurgents were driving ahead after a long period of stalemate, it is sounder now, when a decisive turn of the tide of battle in the Loyalists' favor is followed by another stalemate, and the prospects ahead—supposing the combatants and a compromise settlement cannot are eventually left to themselves be imposed—point to a prolongation of the conflict until one side or the other is exhausted.

No delusion dies harder than the notion that war, once it breaks, can be abbreviated or held within bounds. After twenty years' experience of conflict that moves from front to front, is fought now with economic blockades and propaganda campaigns, again with threats, alliances and sudden maneuvers, but never for a moment stops, the world might be expected to have learned something about the incontinence and inconclusiveness of war. The World War was to have been short and sharp. The Germans would never have started on their quick-step through Belgium if they had not expected to be in Paris in a month. All the armies counted on being home from the trenches for Christmas—the first Christmas.

Expected Easy Victory

Franco's revolt was to have been a "bloodless rising," like the revolution of 1931. He would not have undertaken his premature coup if he had not expected the main towns to fall without resistance when the garrisons rebelled. Certainly his allies would not have backed him had they foreseen how long the thing would last. For at least two months the chief desire of the interventionists has been to get themselves out of the bog by blasting their rivals out. Off the record, ruefully, almost resentfully, they confess that they were misled into thinking the insurrection would be no more than a triumphal march on Madrid, over in a fortnight.

The one recent war that was expected to be long turned out to be short—and that doesn't prove much except the fallibility of prophets and military experts. The quick success of the Ethiopian expedition surprised even the Italians, still a little stunned to find themselves in Addis Ababa. It is frankly admitted in Rome that they were prepared for a two-year campaign and on that calculation piled up excessive and costly reserves of oil and military supplies. But the Ethiopian war is an exception to the rule because it was actually a belated war of the last century, to which modern logic does not apply. The great miscalculation there was in the substance of Africa's last unconquered empire. A month after the invasion began a well-informed British resident of Addis Ababa warned Sir Samuel Hoare that if the invading Italians ever got to Harrar they and the watching world would discover that the "empire" was only a collection of warring tribes over which the Emperor had no control. It was partly on this information that the Hoare-Laval plan was hastily drafted. Made in London and wrecked by outraged British sentiment, its defeated purpose was to save the best part of his kingdom for the Negus and there by protect British interests in Africa before it was demonstrated that there was no Ethiopia.

Slow War Makes for Peace

The tribes are still warring. It will be a long time before the conquerors will complete their conquest. So even the apparent exception helps to prove that no nation can count on a short war. But the irrefutable Q. E. D. is written in Spain. In 1914 that line-up was clear from the first shot and every power in Europe was completely aware that international conflict on the grand scale was beginning. Last July nobody foresaw that the 'putsch' in Spain was the signal for a war that would be local and civil only in the sense that the fighting would take place on Spanish soil. Still less was it foreseen that after nine months the two sides would be locked in a deadly struggle without sign of cessation.

In every capital this demonstration produces an effect which is literally arresting. It is going too far to say that this alone makes potential war-makers stop in their tracks. Other strong deterrents combine to build up a barricade against military adventures. But the proof that a swift decision is impossible in a theater as restricted and off the main track as Spain, even though the newest instruments of the leading military powers have been freely and thoroughly tried out on combatants and civilians, probably acts as powerfully as any one thing to postpone the next war. It is in this sense that official observers in London and Paris begin to see the prolonged agony of Spain as impeding rather than opening the way to war.

Tass Denies Nazi Rumor Of Arrest

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

MOSCOW, May 15.—The Tass News Agency has been authorized to refute the report by the German Information Bureau alleging that Mr. Alexander Serebrovsky, assistant people's Commissar for Heavy Industry, has been arrested as devoid of any foundation whatever, it was announced officially today.

Eight Hours For Women

The measure limiting the working hours of women in Illinois, with reasoned exceptions imposed by special conditions in certain occupations we trust will be passed at this session of the assembly, says in Chicago Daily Tribune. It has already received the approval of the senate and its prospects in the house should be good. The public policy represented is already widely recognized in the United States touching the protection of women workers and should be embodied in the law of Illinois. It has had the approval of the United States Supreme court as well as state courts and undoubtedly expresses the social conscience of Illinois.

Aluminum Firm Sued

ing facilities in foreign countries which could be used to undersell such foreign producers in world markets in retaliation against such foreign producers shipping aluminum to the United States."

A history of the aluminum industry included in the complaint explains that the metal was regarded as rare until 1886 when Charles M. Hall discovered a process for its commercial production and three years later obtained a patent, which was acquired by the Aluminum Company, known at the time of its organization in 1888 as the Pittsburgh Reduction Company.

The company and its subsidiaries, it is alleged, own or hold more than 90 per cent of the bauxite deposits in the United States that are commercially suitable for the production of aluminum; produce all of the alumina used in the United States in the manufacture of aluminum; are the sole producers of virgin aluminum, produced at plants in Alcoa, Tenn.; Massena, N. Y.; Niagara Falls and Badin, N. C., own and control more than 85 per cent of the total virgin aluminum produced and imported and of the secondary or "scrap" aluminum moving in interstate trade and commerce in the United States; sell more than 90 per cent of the aluminum sheet moving in interstate trade and commerce in the United States; produce and sell more than 95 per cent of the alloys of aluminum; sell all the extruded and structural shapes, wire and cable for electrical transmission, and bars, rods and tubing made from aluminum or aluminum alloys; produce and sell about 50 per cent of the aluminum cooking utensils in the United States, and 80 per cent of the aluminum pistons in the United States.

Sees Competition Stifled

"Because," continues the forty-seven page complaint, "new enterprises desiring to engage in the aluminum industry would be placed at the mercy of a single powerful corporation controlling essential raw materials, and because of the great hazard necessarily involved in venturing into a business so completely monopolized by Aluminum Company and its wholly owned subsidiaries, said monopolistic control has had and will continue to have the direct and immediate effect of suppressing and preventing substantial competition which would otherwise arise in the production and sale in interstate and foreign commerce of bauxite, alumina, aluminum and aluminum products manufactured therefrom, and is inimical to the public interest and in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act."

Concerning Andrew W. Mellon and his relatives, the complaint asserts:

"The individual defendant Andrew W. Mellon was a director of defendant Aluminum Company from 1892 to 1921 and participated in its direction and management during that period of time, and he and individual defendant Paul Mellon and individual defendant Ailsa Mellon Bruce have owned, and now own, a large proportion of the capital stock of defendant Aluminum Company, and also through their ownership of all the capital stock of the Coalesced Company have owned, and now own, a large proportion of the capital stock of Aluminum, Ltd., and thereby have influenced and influence the policies and activities of Aluminum Company and Aluminium, Ltd. Said individual defendants may be found in Pittsburgh, care of the Mellon National Bank."

Other individual defendants include Arthur V. Davis, Roy A. Hunt, Edwin S. Fickes, George R. Gibbons, Robert E. Withers, C. B. Fox, Safford K. Colby, Winthrop C. Neilson, George J. Stanley, Irving W. Wilson, David K. E. Bruce, George H. Clapp, Paul J. Urquhart, J. R. D. Huston, C. L. Lycette and J. J. Demskie as officers and directors of the Aluminum Company.

Also Edward K. Davis, Earl Blough, J. H. Alger, G. O. Morgan Jr., J. F. Van Lane, F. L. Farrell, Aime Geoffrion, Leighton McCarthy, W. C. Terry, M. B. de Sousa, L. Braach and Andre Henry Gouannier, as officers and directors of Aluminium, Ltd.

In addition to the two principal defendants, the corporate defendants are the Aluminum Cooking Utensil Company, the Aluminum Goods Manufacturing Company, Aluminum Manufacturers, Inc., Aluminum Ore Company, Aluminum Seal Company, Alcoa Power Company, Ltd., Alton & Southern Railroad, Bauxite & Northern Railway Company, Carolina Aluminum Company, Cedar Rapids Transmission Company, Ltd., Franklin Fluorspar Company, Knoxville Power Company, Louisiana Terminal Company, Massena Securities Corporation, the Massena Termial Railroad Company, Nantahala Power and Light Company, Ocean Dominion Steamship Corporation, the Republic Mining and Manufacturing Company, the St. Lawrence River Power Company, St. Louis & Ohio River Railroad, Surinaamsche Bauxite Maatschappij, the United States Aluminum Company, the Coalesced Company and the Aloxite Corporation.

The complaint, which was filed by Walter L. Rice and John W. Aiken, special assistants to the Attorney General, that the court enjoin all the defendants from further violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law and that:

"Aluminum Company be dissolved and that its properties be rearranged under several separate and independent corporations in such a manner as to dissolve effectively the aforesaid monopolistic control and prevent further violations of said Sherman Anti-Trust Act, and that all of the defendants, corporate and individual, be required to make such divestiture and conveyance of their stock holdings and properties as shall be necessary to accomplish such dissolution.

"That the court appoint such receivers and trustees as may be necessary or appropriate to effectuate a dissolution of Aluminum Company and the aforesaid monopoly."

The government's action against the Mellon interests follows its recent acceptance through the Senate and House of Representatives of the former Secretary's $65,000,000 art gift to the nation. The gift consists of Mr. Mellon's collection of paintings valued at $50,000,000, a gallery in which to hang them and a fund for making additions to the collection.

Mussolini Bans Arms Reduction

By K. K. KAWAKAMI

N. Y. Times

ROME, April 21.—"Armament limitation is possible; armament reduction, no."

These clear-cut words came from Premier Benito Mussolini as I told him that President Roosevelt had evidently been studying the European situation with a view, eventually, to calling an international conference for peace through disarmament. Whether Mussolini would take the existing level of armament as the basis for limitation he declined to clarify.

The writer, received by the Premier at Palazzo Venezia, said that most Americans believed the next world war, if it should unfortunately come, would be fought along the same lines as the last one; namely, democracy against autocracy, now manifesting itself as fascism or nazism.

"What is democracy?" asked Mussolini, and he went on to answer the question himself. "If democracy means a government for the greatest good of the greatest number of people, then the Italy of today is the greatest democracy. Our system is not only conceived but actually functions to promote the welfare and happiness of the people. Those so-called democracies whose submerged tenth are left to shift for themselves have no right to throw stones at us."

I said that both in America and in the Orient the impression prevailed that war in Europe was inevitable.

Denies War Is Inevitable

Mussolini closed his eyes for a moment.

"The situation," he said, "is pregnant with evil possibilities, but to say that war is inevitable is to assume a defeatist attitude. No, war is not inevitable. We shall do all in our power to forestall it. Certainly, Italy will not be held responsible if war unfortunately comes in spite of all our endeavors for peace."

I interrupted him by saying that both Great Britain and the United States emphasized that their respective armaments were for peace preservation. The Premier's eyes suddenly sparkled.

"No," he said, "no armaments on so great a scale can be for peace. They are for war. The Fascists are just as solicitous for peace as any one else, but they decline to be hypocrites. They are frank enough to admit that their armament is for the eventualities of war. The platitudinous pacifism of the so-called democracies should deceive no intelligent man.

"Italy is arming only because this is an imperative duty in the face of the great armaments which other nations are building up."

I said that the fundamental cause of world unrest today seemed to lie in the inequitable distribution of land and natural resources, and asked whether Mussolini thought the necessary readjustment possible through the peaceable intercession of some such organization as the League of Nations.

Says League Must Die

He lifted his hand as if in protest.

"Where is the League of Nations?" he demanded. "The League is confronted by a dilemma. Either it must fundamentally reform itself or it must perish. Since it is impossible for the League to reform itself, it shall die.

"Italy has a long memory. We shall never forget that the League, by diabolical methods, organized an inhuman siege against us and tried to starve our men, women and children. The League is not founded upon justice. It cannot be entrusted with such a humanitarian task as the just distribution of land and natural resources."

I reminded Mussolini that his recent Libya speech, pledging Italy's friendship to the Moslems of the world, had caused Britain much apprehension.

"That speech," he explained, "need worry no nation. Italy's colonial desire has been satisfied through the annexation of Ethiopia, a vast country with great possibilities. Its development requires much time, energy and capital. It will keep us busy for years to come.

"Italy desires to cooperate with all the nations which have colonies in Africa. I am ready for a friendly settlement with Great Britain in regard to her African territories adjoining ours, namely, Kenya and the Sudan."

"England and France seem to be afraid that Italy might obtain territorial concessions from Spain as a price of her help to General Franco," I said.

Says That Is Nonsense

"That is nonsense," Mussolini retorted. "We have not asked and shall never ask General Franco for anything of that nature. Italy has done nothing and will do nothing that will infringe Spain's territorial integrity.

"The Italian volunteers, whose number has been exaggeratedly reported, will come home as soon as agreement is reached for the removal of volunteers of other nationalities, who are far more numerous than Italian volunteers. Furthermore, Italy has no intention of interfering with Spain's internal affairs after the civil war has come to an end."

I asked whether the Mediterranean interests of Italy came in conflict with those of Britain.

"If the Mediterranean Sea is a highway for other nations, it is life for Italy," Mussolini replied. "We have repeatedly stated that we do not intend to menace that highway. We say, however, that our rights and our vital interests in the Mediterranean must be respected by other nations.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

US Shipbuilding

pair yards of the nation showed an increase of 5089 for the year. A total of 36,265 men were at work at the close of the year.

During January the average hours per week for the industry was 26 as against 40.6 for the durable goods industries as a whole, Mr. Smith reported. The average hourly earnings were about 23 per cent above durable good industries as a whole, he said.

Mr. Smith said that expansion of welding in ship construction and the great volume of marine legislation made 1936 notable. The expansion of the nation's foreign trade by 10 per cent also held the attention of the shipping industry.

Mr. Smith was re-elected president of the council, and Roger Williams and C. C. Knerr were re-elected vice-president and secretary treasurer, resepctively.

Disillusioned.

Every year college deans pop the routine question to their undergraduates: "Why did you come to college?" Traditionally the answers match the question in triteness. But last year one University of Arizona co-ed unexpectedly confided:

"I came to be went with—but I ain't yet!"—Los Angeles Junior Collegian.

No War Likely

secretary of the American Council of Pacific Relations, said it was clear that "the next war" might begin in the Far East as readily as in Europe, and that as far as the American Government was concerned its executive branch was "obliged to carry out our foreign policies in the Far East in a vacuum of public opinion."

It was the old conflict in this country, he went on, between the isolationists and the internationalists, with the former considering it is none of our business "to assist China to fight her own battles against Japan," but many of them believing "that the alleviation of Japan's difficulties elsewhere will reduce Japanese pressure on China, thereby improving the whole Far Eastern situation."

"Many isolationists, though I think not the majority, would grant Japan naval parity," he said.

"Internationalists, in summary, believe, first, that the outbreak of war between China and Japan is probable unless foreign countries interfere; second, that such a war is likely to spread to Europe, and third, that the United States must sooner or later become involved."

The isolationist viewpoint was "clearly the view of the general American public," Mr. Field asserted. "In the pending neutrality legislation Congress undoubtedly correctly reflects public opinion."

As to America and the League

Dr. Charles G. Fenwick, Professor of Political Science at Bryn Mawr College, argued, however, that "if we are isolationists today we are isolationists by force of circumstances rather than by national character."

He contended that if the League of Nations became not only an agency for the prevention of violence, but an agency "for the removal of the causes of war," it would find a response from many Americans "who are today but half-hearted in their support of a more restricted League."

"It becomes the task of the League of Nations," he said, "to meet the situation not only by re-affirming its collective guarantees of the existing political order, but by taking constructive steps to build up a new economic order in which so far as possible the reasonable needs of individual States may be adequately met."

Public sentiment, not "money, big business and industry," will determine the "next declaration of war" by this country, according to Dean Carl W. Ackerman of the graduate school of journalism at Columbia University.

"The fact that the press and radio are free from official control constitutes our greatest security as a peaceful nation," he said.

"Propaganda for war is being immunized by counter propaganda for peace wherever the press and radio are free."

Dean Ackerman warned of a trend of public thought in the United States "in the direction of management and control of news," a trend which, he said, was "evident in the widespread criticism of the American press" and in the efforts of powerful groups to establish governmental control of the radio.

Says America Lacks a Creed

Dr. Harwood L. Childs of the School of Public and International Affairs at Princeton University, chided America as having "no creed of our own as a nation, but only a multitude of half-baked ideas."

"When the Senate of the United States rejected President Wilson's proposal," he said, "they did something more than bastardize the League of Nations by failing to legalize our marriage with the rest of the world. They did something to the people of the United States psychologically far more disastrous. They took the props right out from under American idealism; they left us foundering in a sea of disillusionment and skepticism, so that today we are vainly struggling for a national philosophy."

Dr. Childs warned that unless we do have such a philosophy "we shall be at the mercy of the propagandists" if another general European war breaks out, for "we shall have no basis for relating events as they transpire to what we believe is best for the United States."

"When an international crisis comes," he continued, "our decision is likely to reflect the whims of the moment, perhaps even capitulation to the most plausible of the many Huey Longs soliciting our attention. National preparedness is a question not only of military preparedness. It calls for psychological preparedness."

Dr. Childs said a similar statement of peace aims would be no less effective than President Wilson's statement of war aims during the World War.

Carroll Binder, foreign editor of the Chicago Daily News, warned of the readiness with which, he said, "American opinion responded to propaganda," and declared that to "remain at peace with honor and security in a war-minded world," it would be necessary to inculcate among the people a more realistic understanding of the forces at work abroad and interest them in something besides shibboleths. An enlightened foreign policy, he suggested, was preferable to reliance upon inadequate legislation such as the existing neutrality laws.

Sees One Hope for Democracies

In arriving at his conclusion that war was inevitable, Dr. Bradley said the basic factors causing it were population pressure, the distribution of raw material supplies in the world and the nature of the economy in which we live at the present time.

Criticizing democracies for their procrastination, the Amherst Professor of Political Science said their one hope, which had practically evaporated, besides making dramatic sacrifices to avert war—was "to answer the dictators on their own ground, in their own language."

"A dictator can't afford to lose very much face," he said. "while democracies can go on losing face for a long time and still seem to function or their leaders remain in power.

"It seems that Mr. Mussolini had to hurry back from North Africa when the Loyalists did a little better than the Fascists in Spain one or two days," he went on. "I wonder if the British had supported the French when Hitler went into the Rhineland in 1936, whether or not Hitler might not have lost a very great amount of face in Germany as a result of an overt refusal to accept that method of change? Mr. Roosevelt can have thirteen adverse Supreme Court decisions and still get himself elected to the Presidency of the United States."

Dictator Lauds the "Danger Points"

Mr. Millis likewise declared the dictator countries were actually the greatest danger points in Euorpe, but he thought the crisis would not be reached "until either the German or Italian system begins to break down internally."

He was not sure that a Russo-German war, with the other great powers remaining neutral, is impossible, nor was a Franco-Italian war on the same basis beyond his conception. "European statesmanship has so far shown itself remarkably skilful in controlling crises."

Asserting that Congress "voted for an armed resistance by this country on the basis of President Wilson's whole statement of the case as he saw it," Stanley K. Hornbeck, chief of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs in the State Department, discussed the circumstances surrounding our entry into the World War.

The audience of nearly 1,000 persons had difficulty in understanding most of President Benes' broadcast.

G.M.C. Official Tells U.S. to Arm For Neutrality

N.Y. Herald Tribune

PHILADELPHIA, April 17.—A three-point program to govern American economic policies in what he termed "The Impending World War" was presented today to the American Academy of Political and Social Science by James D. Mooney, vice-president of General Motors Corporation.

Picturing what he referred to as the "political insanities" of the last twenty-three years the world over, Mr. Mooney observed "all of these things might seem to imply that our modern civilization, consciously or not, is actually planning its own destruction."

He named as "insanities" the Treaty of Versailles, repudiation of international obligations, paper money and inflation, economic nationalism, "the universal rage to sell without buying or to buy without paying," and the current armament race.

"Armed Neutrality"

Asserting the only neutrality the United States could maintain would be an "armed neutrality," Mr. Mooney advanced these points as "the essence of American economic aims and policies for the impending world war."

1. Drastic discouragement and prevention of exports that will not be paid for.

2. Steady maintenance of exports that will be paid for.

3. Insurance of a flow of imports of the raw materials and processed goods needed to maintain our industries and standards of living—and to enable payment for our exports.

"What I advocate," he said, "is arming for neutrality, just as other nations are now arming for war. And I would advocate making just as thorough a job of it. To be specific, I would advocate the building of a Navy powerful enough to give us recognized freedom of the seas."

Holds Isolation Impossible

Predicting the most destructive war in the history of the world, accompanied possibly by a universal social upheaval "with bloody class war and revolution the only possible outcome," he called isolationism a utopian doctrine, adding:

"It is obvious, from our own record as a neutral in the last war, that neutrality as hitherto practiced is useless as a means of relief for non-warring nations against economic strain or loss. Isolationism, now being advocated, would be even worse than useless."

To maintain freedom of the seas Mr. Mooney advocated developing a merchant marine that could keep up the flow of imports and exports and construction of a Navy to protect the merchantmen.

William R. Castle, of Washington, former Under Secretary of State, declared that "our statesmen fail to see that we can surely keep out of war only if there is no war."

He said present neutrality legislation of the United States "calls itself legislation to keep us out of war and there is serious danger that it will put us into whatever serious war occurs.

"Popular education and understanding of international affairs and appreciation of what other nations are trying to do is going to do more toward keeping us out of trouble than is any local legislation.

"We are going to get into another war just as we got into the last war, and not because somebody lends money to the belligerents, and not because somehow our pride is offended or because we fear that the success of one or the other of the belligerents would mean the downfall of our own system of government."

Dr. Max Winkler, of the College of the City of New York, urged that the government "take a definite interest in matters pertaining to America's foreign investments." He said the only way to safeguard such investiments in time of war "is to eliminate war."

Professor David Mitrany, of Princeton, predicted that "a future war will beyond doubt bring about a completely socialized state-controlled industry, a functional dictatorship."

The largest and most modern beer hall in the Orient, with accommodations for 1,500 customers, will be opened during the middle of June immediately following the completion of the New Tokyo Beer Hall at Sukiyabashi Bridge, opposite the Nippon Gekijo, at an estimated cost of ¥200,000.

The Hall has four floors, the basement being called the "German Room," where special German beer on draught will be served, while on the first and second floors Yebisu beer, special product of the Dai Nippon Beer Factory at Azumabashi, will be catered to the guests. The third floor is set aside as a special dining room, while the beer garden and tea parlor will be located on the fourth floor.

In view of its convenient location, at the intersection of the theater and business streets, the place is bound to become a popular summer "home" of the tired businessman or the place to hold that "party" after attending a theater. (adv.)

The Right Man

"May I ask your profession?" said one of the older residents of the boarding house.

"Sculptor," said the new comer.

"Good!" exclaimed the other. "You're just the man we want. Would you mind carving this roast of beef?"—Grift.

Capitalist System Proves Its Worth, Says Prof. Moley

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., April 30—Professor Raymond Moley of Columbia University, told advertising agencies today their job "is to restore the broken fragments of public belief in the integrity of business to the future development of a well-ordered, democratic America."

"Your job is to see that American business is believed," he said at the annual meeting of the American Association of Advertising Agencies here, adding:

"Because when it is believed, politicians are going to praise, foster and encourage it, not use it as a whipping boy to divert attention from the mistakes of politicians and of government."

The same job, Professor Moley added, must be undertaken by business itself. Professor Moley is editor of a paper and an instructor of public law at Columbia University, New York.

Proved Itself Sound

The speaker expressed belief that "business has a good case, that the system—call it capitalist, or profit, or profit-and-loss—under which it operates, has proved that it is essentially sound."

Professor Moley held that the actual assistance government can give business, if measured in economic and mathematical terms, may be small, "but if measured in psychological terms, may be immense."

"I don't believe, for example, that any public institution such as the Securities and Exchange Commission or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation can actually regulate or see or understand or police more than an infinitely small fraction of the business community," he declared.

"But the fact that they are operating, the fact that they exist and maintain standards provides the public with confidence in the process of investment, of banking and of exchange." Professor Moley added "And that confidence, coupled with the cooperation of those engaged in business. . . develops an entirely new atmosphere, a new state of well being that actually helps to achieve safety and prosperity."

Avenging Angel Role

Discussing the New Deal, Professor Moley said that "in spite of all that a good many of us could say, political methods were devised which used business as a negative political asset, holding it up as a threat to, as an opponent of, progress."

"The Administration still persists in playing the part of avenging angel rather than that of a mediating and unifying force, unwisely, I think, despite the temporary political success it has achieved," he declared.

"But meanwhile the much-abused and, I may say, somewhat sinful economic system that we call capitalism showed its vitality by rising to its feet. It recovered. It now looks something like its former self. But even for this recovery the Administration claims the sole credit. The recovery justifies, we are told the truth of the Administration's attacks."

The professor held that "business can be induced to promote vital challenges to government in the forward march of social and economic well being." He criticized the federal housing program, declaring such work to be "a job for business." "That is just one example of the various fields open to private business activity," he said.

Paris Exposition Dictates Fashions

N. Y. Times

PARIS, April 29.—Schiaparelli features a new svelte evening silhouette that is long and narrow, giving an impression of height at the opening of her midseason collection. She calls it "Paris, 1937," because of the impending French Exposition.

She shows floor-length dinner and cocktail suits for the exposition which are suitable for Sunday night wear. An example is a tailleur consisting of a one-piece, short-sleeved navy rayon jersey dress with a high neck and a tube skirt flared from below the knees. A fitted hip-length packet of pink lame is warn with it.

Another example is a narrow-skirted dress of what crepe topped by a short fitted jacket of white organdy entirely covered at the front with flat roses of pink organdy. Organdy or self-fabric flat pink roses are an important detail, they trim the fronts of cocktail and dinner jackets or edge them. They are used also on the revers of informal cocktail jackets.

Gold and Silver Embroidery

Designs by Jean Cocteau interpreted in gold, silver or paillette embroidery and worked on cocktail and dinner jackets and on bodices are the sensation of the Schiaparelli opening. The designs also appear on skirts of evening frocks. These motifs are surrealistic—exaggerated hands and so on. An outstanding model illustrating this is a light gray linen tailleur for formal cocktail wear. It has a fitted short jacket embroidered with gold and colored paillettes.

Puffed and frilled tulle capes are shown for evening. One hip-length mauve jacket with graduating ruffles accompanies a slim mauve satin dress, with vertical tulle ruffles near the hem and outlining the lowish decolletage.

Some evening dresses in the Sciaparelli collection are draped but retain a slim line. An example is a pale-pink crepe grown with a wrap-around skirit effect closing at the center front with modified drapery of Egyptian inspiration. Another gown has discreetly draped horizontal folds worked from waist to hipline at the back. Schiaparelli's new version of the waltz dress features a skirt floor-length at the back and daytime-length in front. This looks new because the hem dips irregularly in front, making a graceful rather than abrupt straight line. These gowns are sleeveless and low-necked. They are made of printed crepe organza or plain chiffon, and usually are worn over matching colored taffeta petticoats making their rather full skirts stand out. One in white chiffon has a skirt covered with yellow mimosa flowers.

New Jigger Coat Version

A new version of the jigger coat shown for daytime wear is fingertip-length and is closed with a single row of buttons down the center front. The silhouette is slim, almost straight, practically hugging the hipline. The coats match or contrast with dresses shown with them. Ensembles are shown in a new bright pink called "shocking," which is also the name of Schiaparelli's new perfume.

Several types of full-length daytime coats are shown. They include redingotes, moderately loose-backed swagger topcoats, and coats with a fitted line at the front to the waistline and only a slight hem flare. The backs of these coats are moderately loose, with a full-width panel starting from the shoulder.

Suits are typical, with short fitted jackets either contrasting or matching the skirts and with pocket details still important. Some jackets cross in front in surplice fashion with ends that tie below the waistline at the center back. Dressmaker suits have soft upstanding collars and flattering bodice detail.

Dresses for Daytime

One-piece dresses for daytime are typical. They are frequently sleeveless, or barely cover the tops of the arms. Daytime hats and those accompanying formal dinner and cocktail tailleurs have wide, sweeping brims turned up, either off one side, at the back or, occasionally, in front. These are vaguely reminiscent of sombreros, which buyers are using for a catchname describing them. A special new coiffure was created to make these hats more attractive. It features flat curls placed high on the head and almost covering it.

Black and navy are most frequently sued for daytime costume. Featured shades are sweet-potato yellow, ultramarine blue and shocking pink. Unusual prints include seed-catalogue floral designs, rabbits, landscapes and Carribean designs called Louisiana prints. Metal mesh is used for paletots. New fasteners are medals featuring the Exposition. Green tomato-shaped composition fasteners also are used. Much sain-surfaced jersey is used for evening dresses and for some full-length evening coats. Other fabrics are satins, dull rayons and flat-surfaced woolens.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

N.Y. Burlesque Shut

"This," he said, "is the beginning of the end of incorporated filth."

Following a conference with Mr. Moss at Police Headquarters Commissioner Valentine revealed that he had sent out a supplemental teletype order instructing division commanders to serve summonses on managers who refused to close.

The Commissioner said he had heard that a mandamus order had been issued to a few theaters but that the restraining clause had been stricken out.

"If they don't close up, a summons will be served and arrests will be made," he said.

Valentine's Order

The Commissioner's order follows:

"To Deputy Chief Inspectors commanding Boroughs and division and precinct commands concerned:

"Commissioner Moss of the Department of Licenses has just advised the Police Commissioner that he has denied the application for the renewal of the theatrical licenses of fourteen (14) theaters within the City of New York, which are listed below.

"Commanding officers of boroughs, divisions and precincts concerned will forthwith notify the owners, managers, agents or their representatives-in-charge of the following theaters to discontinue the sale of tickets for admission and without reasonable delay to dismiss the audience at the conclusion of the current performance:

Brooklyn

Oxford, 552 State Street.
Minsky's, 409 Flatbush Avenue Extension.
Star, 389 Jay Street.
Century, 852 Monroe Street.
Casino, 1155 DeKalb Avenue.

Manhattan

People's, 195 Bowery.
Republic, 209 West Forty-second Street.
Fifth Avenue, 1185 Broadway.
Gaiety, 1539 Broadway.
Apollo, 233 West Forty-second Street.
Irving Place, 13 Irving Place.
New Gotham, 165 East 125th Street.

"Upon failure on the part of the management of any of the above mentioned theaters to comply with the above order, commanding officers concerned are directed to station a patrolman in uniform in front of the theater concerned. The patrolman so stationed will advise all prospective patrons that the premises is unlicensed and is operating in violation of law."

It was reported that the Irving Place Theater had been successful in obtaining a writ, but at 5 p. m. the management paid off the performers and told them they would be notified if and when the house was to be reopened.

Commissioner Moss praised the Police Department for its "splendid cooperation on a busy day" and Justice Miller for denying a motion to restrain him in his refusal to license the burlesque houses.

"I am gratified and pleased to find the court cooperating in my drive against the filth being presented in these theaters—filth no newspaper would publish," he said. "It is heartening to a public official, who has been trying for the last three or four years to clean up a bad situation, to know he is being supported."

seen now and then in an older role, but he has definitely joined the fathers only now in "Gefahrliches Spiel" (Dangerous Game); that is, although he appears here with a full-grown daughter (Jenny Jugo), he is an extremely youthful father, more mature and harsh in his figure, perhaps, than we formerly knew him, but otherwise quite as one would have imagined the great charmer of former days as a still youngish Daddy.

Pola Negri, with whom, as has been said, Harry Liedtke started his screen career some two decades ago, has made a surprisingly successful comeback since "Mazurka," and it looks as if Harry Liedtke is destined to do the same thing.

Soviet Army Rated Lower In Europe

By HANSON W. BALDWIN

N. Y. Times

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia, April 19.—Russia's Red Army of 1,350,000 men is not generally credited in Europe with the great efficiency attributed to it in America, a survey of representative opinions in various capitals has determined.

The Poles, who defeated the Russians in the Battle of the Vistula after the World War, seem to feel confident that with the help of Rumania, their ally, they could repeat that victory today. Other nations, while displaying hearty respect for the tremendous Russian manpower, regard the somewhat unorthodox Russian tactics with mixed emotions and are of two minds about the technical efficiency of Russian equipment.

There are two things, however, about which all are agreed: First, that the Russian Army is the most formidable in the world as far as numerical strength of the active army and available mobilizable manpower are concerned, and, secondly, its weakness, its inadequate transportation facilities and the possibility of a breakdown of its industrial production in case protracted mass effort on a wartime scale is required.

Few Details Are Known

In detail probably less is known about the Russian Army than any other, not only because of the intense secrecy in which all national defense projects are shrouded and the suspicion and even fear with which inquiring foreigners are greeted, but also because of the very vastness of the country makes it possible to maneuver an army corps with no one in the outside world any the wiser. Hence, accurate facts are impossible to get, even in Russia.

However, the best estimates say Russia increased her annual military budget from about $208,000,000 in 1931 to almost $3,000,000,000 in 1936. With these expenditures she has undoubtedly built up the largest air force numerically in Europe and is generally credited with possessing and operating 3,000 to 4,000 tanks, mostly light, but also many of medium size and some heavy. These tanks are believed to be improvements on American and British models and are said to be rather efficient.

Russia's planes also are basically American in design with several new types the Russians developed themselves. But despite their large number of tanks and other mechanized forces, the Russians still rely to a great extent on cavalry, with many divisions still entirely horsed. They have a higher proportion of cavalry to infantry than any other European army except Poland's. They apparently use this cavalry more or less indiscriminately with mechanized forces.

Cavalry Criticized

This has aroused comment and criticism in some European military circles, as has also the much publicized parachuting of armed troops, which most military opinion regards as a spectacular but relatively unimportant stunt.

No one knows the exact distribution of the Russian forces, but the Soviet authorities, apparently aware of the weakness of that slender link of steel, the Trans-Siberian Railway, have permanently garrisoned Far Eastern Siberia with an army said to number between 250,000 and 300,000 men, with 1,000 planes and the same number of tanks.

Some of the western as well as the eastern border is believed to be fortified, and some areas, particularly near Minsk, are known to be heavily garrisoned.

The Russians are great on camouflage, and some of their machine-gun nests for border defense are sunk completely beneath the ground and covered with "trap doors" on which sod and bushes have been placed. Thus these nests are completely invisible not only from the air but also from near by on the ground, and the enemy is unaware that the defenses are near until the "trap doors" are flung back and soldiers' guns rise out of holes in the earth.

The Russians have made great efforts to foster their military industries and improve transportation and communication facilities, but they are still suffering from lack of skilled workmen. Their planes, for instance, are not finely machined like American ones.

Judging from reports of recent travelers in Russia, the railroads have not improved much in recent years, with derailments, slight accidents and delays frequent, particularly on the Trans-Siberian.

Despite these difficulties, Russia, because of the vastness of the country and its illimitable source of manpower—much of which, however, particularly the reserves, is but indifferently trained—can not be sucessfully invaded, it is generally agreed, although, as one man expressed it, little bits of her border territory might be nibbled off.

But no nation is going to start hurriedly to do the nibbling with the countless legions of Russian manpower ready to stop it.

Time-Sense Found In Waves Of Brain

By WILLIAM L. LAURENCE

N. Y. Times

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Evidence for the existence of a "time-clock" in the brain which goes on ticking in a cyclic rhythm all its own when we are asleep or awake, was presented today before the National Academy of Sciences.

The "time-clock" was described as "subconscious cyclic process of some sort going on in the brain, which is no doubt the basis of our perception of time intervals." It is this subconscious rhythm, it is believed, that offers the first scientific explanation for the widely-observed fact that an individual will wake from a sound sleep at an hour on which he had fixed his mind before going to sleep.

The evidence for the existence of this specific time sense came during studies of the electrical brain waves which are characteristic of every human being. The studies were reported by Dr. F. Newton Harvey, Alfred L. Loomis and Garret A. Hobard 3d of Princeton University and the Loomis Laboratory, Tuxedo Park, N. Y.

The study revealed, they reported, two types of individuals, with every possible gradation between the two extreme types. At one extreme is the type with almost continuous pure alpha rhythm, the brain waves coming at the rate of ten a second. On the other extreme is the type with practically no alpha rhythm, but with marked beta potentials of thirty to forty a second.

Test for Depth of Sleep

The brain-wave patterns during sleep, they reported, are so characteristic that they may be used as a criterion of states or depth of sleep.

There are four states of sleep in a person showing marked alpha rhythm, the studies show. At first there comes a more and more marked interruption of the alpha rhythm. The second state shows a complete disappearance of the alpha activity. The third stage shows the appearance of large random waves, and the fourth is marked by these random waves, plus short bursts of fourteen-a-second rhythm, known as "spindles."

The existence of the "time-clock" in the brain was observed on a subject during the third state of sleep, when a tone was sounded at certain intervals. The tone signal gave rise to a short burst of alpha rhythm, but this rhythm came ahead of the signal by 2½ seconds for three successive half-minute periods.

Measurement Between Atoms

A precise method for measuring the infinitestimal distances between atoms in molecules was described by Dr. Harold D. Babcock of Mount Wilson Observatory, Carnegie Institution of Washington.

The method applies to the spectroscopic studies of stars, which bridge distances of millions of light-years, to the minute spaces within the nuclei of atoms. For example, the distance separating the atoms in a molecule of oxygen has been determined to be about one-hundredth of a millionth of a centimeter. A centimeter is less than half an inch.

The terrestrial effects which were observed last year to accompany bright eruptions in the chromosphere of the sun, promise a basic advance in the study of the earth's outer atmosphere, the academy was told by Dr. A. G. McNish of the department of research in terrestrial magnetism, Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Intense bright hydrogen eruptions were observed in the sun's chromosphere on April 8, Aug. 25, and Nov. 6, 1926. There were accompanied by simultaneous effects on the earth's magnetism and on radio communication.

Immediately when these bright eruptions were observed with the spectro-heliroscope, Dr. McNish said, radio signals normally reflected from the E-layer and higher layers in the ionosphere ceased to be returned, and a special type of change occurred in the earth's magnetic field.

Academy's Medals Presented

The annual dinner and presentation of the four Academy medals took place tonight at the Academy building, with Dr. Frank R. Lillie of the University of Chicago, president of the Academy, presiding.

The James Craig Watson Medal, with an honorarium of $100, was presented to Professor Ernest William Brown of the Yale University Observatory, "in recognition of his outstanding contributions to astronomical science, mainly in the field of gravitational theory in the solar system."

The Henry Draper Medal was awarded to Dr. C. E. Kenneth Mees of the Eastman Kodak Company, for his development of photographic plates sensitive to the red and infra-red end of the spectrum, which "made possible the recent great advance in knowledge of this highly important region of the radiant energy of the stars."

The Agassiz Medal for oceanography was awarded to Dr. Martin Knudsen of the University of Copenhagen, in recognition for his work in that field of scientific research. In Dr. Knudsen's absence the medal was presented to Otto Wadsted, the Danish Minister to the United States.

The Mary Clark Thompson Medal and honorarium of $160 was awarded to Dr. Amadeus William Grabau of the National University of Peiping, China, as "recognition for his long and distinguished record in palaeontology and stratigraphic geology." In his absence the medal was presented to Dr. Grabau's wife, Mary Antin Grabau.

Subtle

The dramatic critic was approached by the producer whose show had been panned the previous evening.

"You were very severe on my play," said the producer. "What was really so bad about it?"

"I didn't like the way you handled your lights," replied the critic.

"What was wrong with them?"

"They were on!"—Wall Street Journal.

By Mr. Oreste Vaccari and Mrs. Enko Vaccari
This new publication is the most comprehensive book for the study of Japanese ever published either here in Japan or abroad. Beginning with how to write the Japanese "kana" characters, the book is systematically arranged so as to enable the student to complete the standard of education of the Japanese.
A supplement to the grammar has been published containing Japanese onomatopoetic expressions, English idioms and English verbs followed by prepositions with corresponding idiomatic Japanese translation, an English-Japanese vocabulary, and the sixty translation exercises of the grammar printed in Roman letters and Chinese-Japanese characters with English version.

Studying Japanese with this Grammar Becomes a Real Pleasure
EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE
Written by Count Ayské Kabayama, chairman of the Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai (The Society for International Cultural Relations of Tokyo).
"Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari have brought out what I would like to regard as the most complete book to date for the study of Japanese, and have, thereby, provided an effective and practical guide toward a basic study of the Japanese nation and people ....The method introduced by the authors is not only scientific, but human....the particular of the language, fully treated with practical examples, have been regulated in each lesson according to the measure of a partial effort of the mind....The Japanese taught in the book has struck me as of the best commonly accepted diction today....The authors have introduced a new system of giving all the sentences in the book in Japanese characters and Roman transliteration with their respective English translation, an innovation most likely to prove very helpful....Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari have published a book of high merit and may be regarded as the initiators of a new system for teaching Japanese.
EXTRACTS FROM PRESS COMMENTS
THE JAPAN TIMES & MAIL, February 17th. These two volumes are unquestionably the most complete and best books for the study of Japanese, and have filled the long felt need for such good books among foreigners....These books will become the standard medium by which Japanese language can be mastered.
THE JAPAN ADVERTISER, February 17th. These two volumes represent a tremendous effort....Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari's book should be of great benefit to those foreigners who desire to master Japanese.
THE TOKYO NICHI NICHI, February 14th. The books recently published by Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari can be recommended as the best ones to date for the study of Japanese.

KOBE NAUTICAL COLLEGE FETES 17TH ANNIVERSARY

The Kobe Nautical College will celebrate the 17th anniversary of its founding on Sunday, May 30, when the entire premises of the college will be thrown open to the public with the invitation to inspect its up-to-date equipment. It is hoped that the celebration will serve to import some knowledge of the shipping world to the people of the Hanshin district, to encourage a seafaring spirit among them, and to impress them with the need of nautical education.

The celebration will continue from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., rain or shine. There will be an exhibition of nautical machinery and instruments, including Diesel and turbine engines and the Anschutz gyrocompass. The actual working of these will be demonstrated and explained by instructors and cadets. Other equally interesting demonstrations will be given to show how the cadets are being trained in practical seamanship. These will include exercises requiring skill and agility in manipulating sails, handling boats, etc. A seaplane will also be on view.

Various forms of entertainment are being arranged: an amateur concert, a cinematographic show, swimming and wrestling matches, gymnastic exercises, and community singing. Useful utensils made by cadets of the engineering department will be sold cheap at a bazaar. Refreshments will be served at cost prices.

Other features, which ought to attract the attention of visitors, will be the original and artisic panoramic decoration of the interior of the college dormitories and a representation of the ceremony performed aboard ships when "crossing the line."

The college is located at Fukae, the first non-express stop west of Ashiya on the Hanshin Electric Line. No tickets will be required for admission to the college grounds.

Rust, Mr. W. C. Winton, Mr. B. O. Williams, Miss A. Weiland and Mrs. M. A. Walters.

Mexico To Divide

States Embassy has arranged for tomorrow. It sets forth the official program.

In addition to these large projected land seizures, which already are under way, there have been several instances recently of the Mexican Government's seizing lands after crops had been sowed by American owners. President Cardenas promised several months ago to recompense foreign owners for land taken, within the limits of Mexico's ability to pay, but since then no steps have been taken in this direction.

President Cardenas ruled that land already sold by the Colorado River Company in the Mexicali Valley to Mexican colonizers will not be affected by recent seizures, but such land represents only a small part of the company's total holding of more than 700,000 acres, of which an area of about 150,000 acres is under cultivation and a like area potentially cultivatble if irrigated.

General Cardenas does not deny the company has sold more than the minimum amount of land fixed by the agreement of April 4, 1936, but he holds that the agrarian reform program, permitting division of land among peasants without any immediate payment, still applies.

In his decree of March 14, this year, the President ruled the company's lands should be divided among Lower California peasants.

Legality of Seizure Argued

The official newspaper Nacional insisted in a long article on March 23 that the Lower California land division was "entirely legal," despite the agreement of April 4, 1936. It is reported that about 100,000 acres of this land has already been given to peons by the government.

In his letter on this subject published today General Cardenas asserts:

"These lands shall be given to all groups of the population that may have applied for them in accordance with the terms of the agrarian code.

"On giving the peasants land of the Colorado River Company, care shall be taken not to divide the small part already sold under the company's agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture.

"The lands of the Colorado River Company that various colonizers may have contracted to rent can be taken but not given to peasants until the crops already planted are harvested.

"The agrarian program that the government is carrying out is uniform in the entire country."

"Groups in the Mexicali Valley who have petitioned for land in accordance with the law cannot be denied," says the President in his letter. "It would be granting special privileges to companies like the Colorado River Company not to give lands to peasants merely because the company has authorization to divide them. It is well known that the Agrarian Law demands that land gifts be attended to first.

"Nevertheless, notwithstanding the fact that many lands already sold by the company are not properly titled in accordance with the law, it has been ordered that the lands already sold shall not come under the agrarian law."

Transatlantic Air Service On Soon

N. Y. Times

WASHINGTON,—The last diplomatic obstacle to commencement of transatlantic service by airplane has been removed. Colonel J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, announced recently that an agreement had been reached with Canada over the perplexing question of whether Montreal or New York is to be the terminal of the service on this side of the Atlantic.

By the agreement there will be two routes from the jumping-off point at Botwood, Nfld., to New York, one, the coastal, by way of Shediac, N. B., over New England to New York—the shorter route—and the other, by way of the St. Lawrence Valley to Montreal and thence down through the Adirondacks and the Hudson Valley to New York. Reciprocal licensing agreements will follow as a mere formality, and soon the wide-winged Cavalier of Imperial Airways, now making short hops around Bermuda, will cast its shadow on the towers of Manhattan and another of Pan American Airways, pioneering Clippers will be plying back and forth to Bermuda on soaring over the Great Circle route between Newfoundland and Ireland.

However, it does not appear now that the transatlantic field is to be left entirely to Pan American. A week ago Glenn L. Martin informed the Department of Commerce that he and unnamed associates were planning to enter the transatlantic field with new, larger and faster long-range boats than had ever been built before.

Details of Mr. Martin's plans for his new ships have not been made public. However, his reputation as a builder and a daring designer is such that when he assured the Department of Commerce that he is building an Atlantic plane that will cruise with pay load for 5,000 miles, that will fly at 175 miles an hour and make the Atlantic crossing in twenty hours or less the officials took him seriously enough to announce the plans.

Airship and Plane

Meanwhile, the three companies which have been at work on the project for several years are ready to go. The Zeppelin Hindenburg is being groomed for the resumption of her schedule of last Summer with the addition of eight trips to the ten Dr. Eckener scheduled early in the year. That will make thirty-six crossings of the Atlantic during the Summer—and already bookings indicate that the airship will carry a full load in both directions on every trip. While no rates have been published for mail, it is possible that the cost of a single letter may be cut well below the 40 cents that was charged last Summer.

Pan American Airways and Imperial Airways are ready to start their test flights while Germany's Lufthansa, with bigger and faster catapult planes, will be coming into New York soon unless unforeseen delays intervene.

Then Air France is about ready with new multimotored giant flying boats for a series of survey flights. With all these companies from abroad Pan American has cooperative arrangements on weather and servicing in this country. Moreover, a plan has been worked out for an exchange among them all of weather experience and data which is sure to provide a veritable library of new upper air information on the stormy and uncertain ocean route.

Companies Are Ready

Governmental delays alone have been holding up the first flights of Pan American and Imperial in one way or another for weeks. In the first place there has actually been no terminal available on the shores of the United States. Charlestown, Baltimore and New York are all professedly eager for the Atlantic service. Baltimore is spending millions on a gigantic combination land and seaport close to the city's center, and Pan American has already signed a contract with that city for use of the base as a terminal for services by way of Bermuda and the Azores.

In this connection Pan American has just concluded arrangements with Portugal—after years of negotiation—for a twenty-five-year concession in the Azores and at Lisbon for a mid-Atlantic route. New York is still moving slowly on its seaplane base at the Curtiss Airport at North Beach, which the city has leased for a term of years—but it is not ready to receive and service the great flying boats that will pioneer the service.

Long Island Plant

At Bermuda the island government and Imperial Airways have prepared such a base and one of the new Empire-type flying boats of the line is awaiting the word for the first hop to New York or some other port on the North American Continent. Pan American, without waiting for Baltimore and New York to finish their terminals, has gone to work at its own sea airport at Port Washington, L. I., on Manhasset Bay, where the German catapult flying boats were berthed last Summer, to prepare it for use as a temporary ocean air terminal.

One big hangar, the largest on the Atlantic coast north of Dinner Key, is being equipped with machinery for servicing. The radio station installed last Summer is being enlarged and the naked steel timbers of the defunct American Aeronautical Corporation, which Pan American took over when the company bought the base four years ago, is being finished to make the world's largest airplane hangar. Also a new ramp is being built and the channel is being deepened so that Port Washington can receive the giant ocean fliers of all nations when they put in an appearance this Summer.

The Air Ministry looks upon the North Atlantic as merely a water gap to be closed by the fast-flying planes between Canada and the mother country. Its officials envisage a British air line around the world, a Great Circle route from the British Isles to Montreal and the shortest transcontinental route in existence across North America to Vancouver. The Canadians say that the Americans must eventually fly over Canadian territory to put in an efficient airway between the United States and Alaska, so dangerous is the outside route from Seattle to Seward as compared with an inside route east of the mountains up through Edmonton and then over the humps to Alaska.

This operation would connect nicely with the all-Canadian transcontinental with branches to Chicago, Detroit, New York and the Twin Cities. As the Air Ministry sees the picture, New York is just a branch terminal from Montreal on the main line around the world. With that notion in mind a splendid airport has been constructed some fifty air-line miles north of St. John's N. F., only a little more than 1,800 miles from Valencia Head, Ireland.

Under this plan, Pan American Airways would fly the route jointly with Imperial, thus making it an international operation with the two most experienced international operators in the world cooperating. The plan also includes a north and south operation from some port in Canada to Bermuda and thence south over the British West Indies to South America and British Guiana, again flying over a region which Pan American so successfully pioneered and over which the American company has been operating now for nine years.

Perhaps the most interesting development in prospect is the ultimate plan of Imperial and Pan American to use land planes instead of flying boats over the North Atlantic. For years these two companies have pioneered the boat as the plane to use over water. The building in Great Britain of their new Albatross type and in this country of the high-altitude torpedo-shaped Boeings indicates a complete about-face in this matter and a confession that the modern flying boat, no matter how well it is built, cannot attain the range and load in the immediate future at least, that will be necessary for commercial operation over the Atlantic.

De Valera's Foes Hold

make laws for peace and order and the good government of this State, there is little cause for quarrel or complaint.

"The changes in the Constitution, such as they are, may reveal certain retrograde steps. The powers given the new President are given at the expense of Parliament and the people and may seriously hamper their right to put their wishes into effect. In practice may not the exercise of these powers prove inconsistent with democratic institutions?

Partition Is Not Solved

"The new draft instrument makes no contribution to the solution of our foremost problems, but may, indeed, aggravate them. Solution of our main political problem—partition—is not furthered by make-believe and the great problem of ensuring our people prosperity and a means of livelihood in their own land is not tackled.

"The solution of such problems cannot be derived from any legislative enactment and can only be found through the proper exercise of that sovereignty and liberty which our people already have. Wise and prudent exercise of that liberty and its careful safeguarding are the main considerations to be borne in mind.

"This Constitution provides powers and privileges for the new head of the Stat. There is nothing in it which secures any powers or liberties for the ordinary citizen other than those he already enjoys."

Apart from The Irish Press every Irish daily newspaper is critical and caustic. The Irish Press hails the Constitution draft as an instrument animated by the spirit of social justice which "provides for equality for all and privilege for none."

The Irish Times says:

"The Governor General, abolished some time ago, is replaced by a far more imposing functionary in the President of Eire, who apparently will be a super governor general masquerading as the President of the Republic or the President of the Republic masquerading as a super governor general."

"Surely," says The Times, "the new Constitution abrogates the treaty with Britain, or, if not, what on earth does it mean? As matters stand Free State citizens are citizens of the Commonwealth, enjoying virtually all privileges in Britain of the Englishman or Scot. They are accepted as co-equal citizens througout the Empire and can move freely from Ireland to Britain without passports or restrictions of any kind.

"They are eligible everywhere for jobs—hundreds of them go across to England every week in search of work—and but for this fact both of our universities would be forced to close their gates within twelve months. What will be the situation now in default of some previous arrangement between Dublin and London."

The Irish Independent, commenting editorially, says:

"De Valera's followers will be sadder and wiser today when they have searched in vain in his new Constitution for any signs of that promised millenium at hand. This great charter of the people's liberties, as it has been boosted, is no more and in many respects is much less than the Constitution which de Valera spent years in denouncing and tearing up as a British-made document."

After declaring the new draft is the old Constitution in a new guise The Independent adds:

"Apart from certain amendments de Valera will naturally have the whole hearted support of the Opposition in enacting the document for its own finest tributes to his credit that he has produced a Constitution in regard to which there will be no serious division of opinion. De Valera is learning wisdom from experience."

The Cork Examiner says:

"If the British authorities take the present draft literally and hold that every Free State born resident of Great Britain is an alien a position at once difficult and very painful will be created for them. Except for its vagueness in regard to the future position of the Free State within or without the Commonwealth there is not much in the draft to which any serious objection need be expressed."

Northern opinion, as reflected in Belfast newspapers, is particularly incensed because President de Valera chose to draft the Constitution for all Ireland, although there is no intention for its early application to Ulster. The Northern Whig says:

"If the Constitution is approved, as apparently it will be, it will set forth and perpetuate falsehood. The voters of twenty-six counties cannot speak for the Irish nation and any declaration they make will be in no sense the voice of Ireland. The new name of the Free State is to be Eire, but that will not make the Free State Ireland.

Troubles Plague Harlem's 'Heaven'

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL

N. Y. Times

"Heaven" is a five-story brownstone house at 20 West 115th Street and "God" is a short, middle-aged Negro, in the simple theology of the followers of Father Divine, Harlem's most successful evangelist and entrepreneur.

He preaches a gospel of "peace," but even "angels" sin occasionally in Harlem. So it was that three white visitors to the father's "kingdom" were assaulted by the faithful, making it necessary for his children to scrape up $500 to bail him out of jail. All Harlem is wondering what on earth will happen next in "heaven."

Father Divine, a former handyman who liked to preach about the "tangibleatable" Presence of God and similar concepts, moved "heaven" to Harlem about four years ago. Prior to that he had conducted a "heapen" at Sayville, L. I., where unappreciative neighbors had him arrested for maintaining a public nuisance. Justice Lewis J. Smith, who sentenced Divine to jail for a year, fell dead less than five days later, a manifestation, so the faithful thought, of "God's power."

Coincidence Helped Rise

This coincidence undoubtedly contributed to the ascendancy of Father Divine, who has come a long way from what might almost be called his salad days at Sayville, when he ruled over only one "heaven" and only a handful of "angels." Today he has branch "heavens" in Baltimore, Newark, Jersey City and Bridgeport, Conn., and there are several thousand "angels" and "children" all working for him.

The real seat of his kingdom, however, is Harlem, whose Negro population is about 204,000. In the main "heaven" there he has his own living quarters, a huge auditorium and a banquet hall, for pork chops are an important part of the theology of his cult. It is truly wonderful, as his followers constantly remind you. Some fifty or sixty "angels"—that is, men and women who have turned over their savings or their weekly pay checks to him—live there rent free.

On West 126th Street there is an extension, or sort of training school for "angels." It consists of a row of seven four-story buildings, leased by Father Divine's "Angel No. 1," who calls herself "Faithful Mary" and who conducts them as rooming houses for the "children" of the cult. About fifty "children" live in each of the six houses and pay $1 a week for the privilege. They pay from 15 to 20 cents for their meals. The "angels" eat free.

Has Many Projects

Father Divine signs no lease, has no bank account and says he owns nothing, although outsiders have estimated that his various projects must bring in more than $10,000 a week. There are cleaning establishments, grocery stores, barber shops, weekly newspapers and restaurants conducted in his name. There is even a small coal business which the District Attorney's office is trying to prove is an outlet for bootleg coal.

All these sell goods or services at a little below the prevailing Harlem scale, but, as labor costs are a negligible item to Father Divine, each enterprise is profitable.

Lawyers trying to find assets of Father Divine which they could attach to satisfy a $6,152 judgment filed against him in Maryland were unable to find a penny. The judgment grew out of an accident at Aberdeen, Md., when a motor bus in which a group of "angels" were going to a branch "heaven" in Baltimore crashed into another car.

In a garage on West 144th Street the lawyers found seven buses, nine trucks and five limousines for the use of Father Divine and his Peace Mission. All were registered in the heavenly names of "angels," for in the Divine hierarchy earthly names are dropped. However, Father Divine, who owns nothing, paid for farm lands he bought in Ulster and Orange Counties with hard cash.

The Promised Land

There are about 1,000 acres in this "Promised Land" as it is called by the disciples. On it is a Peace Hotel at High Falls, near Kingston. But not one inch of the property is in the name of Father Divine. Angels hold the deeds.

The size of Father Divine's following is hard to estimate and probably has been exaggerated. His lawyer, Arthur A. Madison, says there are 50,000,000 believers, including white folk as well as Negroes. Actually there may be 5,000 in Harlem. With their parades and demonstrations they are highly visible and create the impression that there are thousand where there are only hundreds.

Opinion is divided in Harlem as to whether Father Divine is a good influence or a bad one. On the good side of the ledger it is pointed out that he preaches a doctrine of "peace." He is against violence, presumably even when used against process servers. He denounces stealing and insists upon restitution. He provides food and lodging for his followers at bargain rates and the living conditions are no worse than might be found elsewhere in Harlem.

Important New Invention Made In Gramophones

An important step has been taken in the progress of gramophones. This invention is especially useful for singers or dancers. The usual record on a gramophone plays for three or maybe six minutes if the record is a twelve inch one. Now a machine has been invented by Mr. Shozo Konishi, president of the Nippon Filmon Co. Ltd. which will put this invention on the market probably in September. Mr. Shu Hattori, who is well known among theater people here is the managing director of the company. The company is going to build its studio, which will be completed in September for the recording of the special records at Komae-mura, in the suberbs of Tokyo, and its office at 39 Niban-cho, Kojimachi-ku.. The company has a fully paid up capital of ¥1,000,000.

This machine will play for a maximun time of two hours without any interruption to change records. The machine has no record in the way we understand a record but a Filmon circulating sound belt in endless coil. The belt is about one and a half inches wide and a ten meter coil will play for 30 minutes. Think of the possibilities, complete operas on one record, dance accompaniment without interruption and the Japanese songs, especially, could be heard right through without any stopping to turn the record.

These machines are not yet produced in their final perfection although the test machine is extremely good. This company will produce before autumn, machines with radio attachment which will play both the sound coils and the ordinary discs. The portable machine is also able to play both kinds of records and it takes twelve inch as well as ten inch ones.

These machines are at the same time very reasonable in price. The portable machines sell for about ¥80 and the company even hopes to make them cheaper before long. The prices of the records vary according to length, but for ¥3 one can get a length equivalent to six ten inch records that is twelve sides. If one bought the records it would amount to ¥9.

All lovers of music should look out for the time when this machine will be put on the market. It is certainly worth while if one likes to listen to operas or other long selections—(Advt.)

Labor In Sweden Opposes Fascism

By ALMA LUISE OLSON

N. Y. Times

STOCKHOLM.—For the May 1 demonstrations in Sweden, labor groups will rally primarily around the Social Democratic manifesto with its plea for peace and justice and against the further spread of Fascist control in the world. It calls for a united front on behalf of those in Spain or other parts of the world who are fighting for popular liberty and self-determination. In national policy the manifest demands continuance of the democratic reform program.

Since the League of Nations defaulted a year ago, Swedish Social Democrats have shifted ground and no longer oppose increased national defense. Here, then, is a country that for nearly a century and a quarter has had uninterrupted peace, and yet there is no political party resisting the arms race.

Voices of peace groups are practically drowned in the hum of preparedness, but here and there one still finds a few who look upon this shift of ground as a reactionary trend. New popular slogans such as "Arms rather than the yoke of tyranny," however, are coming up from the ranks. It is against nazism and fascism that labor is marshalling its forces.

Helping Others Arm

The situation is paradoxical. While labor will march in long phalanxes here on May Day, Swedish raw materials will be feeding the armaments industry abroad. The conservative Svenska Dagbladet points out editorially that some twenty-odd trains a day carry ore shipments from the iron fields, partly State-owned, over State-owned railways to the seaport of Narvik for export. To Germany alone go some forty or fifty boatloads of ore each week.

A recent move to create a system of defense for the "North'—the three Scandinavian powers and Finland—has not made much headway. There are enthusiastic supporters for the idea in Sweden, which would logically become headquarters for the new measure, but both in Denmark and Norway political groups sharply oppose the plan. In cultural relations, however, the tie among these four countries is constantly being strengthened.

League's deliberations.

The Assembly adjourned after the conclusion of the speeches until 10 a.m. tomorrow when it will remeet to elect a new judge to the World Court. The Council will meet at the same time to take part in the balloting, the election of a new justice requring action by both bodies.

Secretariat officials meanwhile announced that the Council will start debating Valencia's appeal on Friday afternoon. Delegation quarters were uncertain whether the debate will be concluded by adoption of a formal resolution or a mere declaration by the president.

After electing a new court judge, the Council will tomorrow hear a joint statement by the French and British delegates regarding Belgium's position under the Covenant.

Tension Mounts

Border Landmark No. 22 on May 21, a separate group of three mounted Soviet soldiers invaded the Manchoukuo territory near Boundary Mark No. 19 about five o'clock in the afternoon.

The Soviet cavalrymen are stated to have attempted to scout the Manchoukuo district through a field-glass, but espied by Manchoukuo frontier guards in the act, were finally repulsed into their own territory following an exchange of rifle fire.

Soviet Coal Influx

total production of Donetz coal increased from 24,500,000 metric tons to 30,700,000 metric tons, the percentage of mechanization went up from 15.7 to 30.4, monthly wages in rubles from 55.77 to 64.76 and production costs on an annual basis dropped slightly from 10,710,000 rubles to 10,410,000 rubles.

American and German electrical coal cutting machines were put to work in the mines and three American concerns, Stuart, James & Cook of New York, Roberts & Garcia, Chicago, were retained to introduce the manufacture of machines, reorganize old mines and assist in technical planning.

On the question of whether Russian coal is produced by "forced" labor, the Tariff Commission said that measures were taken for the "recruiting" of labor for Donetz and penalties were imposed to those who left their employment, but nothing was found in the law to prevent a worker "from returning to the farm or seeking employment in such private enterprises as may exist."

The reports to Congress quoted Russian accounts which laid the difficulty in retaining workers at Donetz to the inadequacy of food and housing in the area.

The Tariff Commission's report found that mine ventilation at Donetz was poor, safety regulations not obeyed by miners, water supply vastly inadequate and that the miners in 1927-28 each averaged production of 12.4 tons of coal per month compared to an output of 1.93 tons per day or about 40 tons per month, in Pennsylvania anthracite fields in 1929.

It pointed out, however, that the Russian miners employed underground worked a five-day week of six hours a day, where the "continuous work week" was adopted, and received annual vacations of one month with pay.

Chile To Spend $37,500,000 On Home Building

Christian Science Monitor

SANTIAGO, Chile—Chile plans to spend 300 million pesos ($37,500,000 at par) annually on a 20-year building program in the interests of the workers. This sum is provided in two laws recently passed by Congress and signed by President Alessandri, but, according to an official statement, it will be "absolutely insufficient" owing to the "enormous housing crisis" that exists today in this country.

In tackling this prblem, which is intimately bound up with slum clearance, the Government is to cooperate with the banking world, municipalities and private enterprise. The main lines of this cooperation are established in the Popular Housing Act, under which departmental and communal councils have been set up throughout the country, with a Superior Housing Council in Santiago. The financing will be effected through the Popular Housing Bank.

Loans by Bank

The state will contribute 250 millions in annual instalments toward the bank capital and the Obligatory Insurance Bank 30 millions. The remainder of the 300 millions will be supplied by miscellaneous loans and the additional revenue from estate duties as a result of the revaluation of property. Apart from these annual contributions, the President of the Republic is empowered to issue once-only loans not exceeding 60 millions, while the National Savings Bank has also agreed to lend.

The bank will make loans to stimulate the building of workers' homes. The decentralization of the schemes is guaranteed by allotting the money according to the population of each zone. This is important in a country of considerable territorial extension and where municipalities have small budgets. To assist local authorities, the Government has agreed to lift the existing ban on municipal loans, so long as thees are devoted exclusively to housebuilding and the amounts bear a stipulated relation to the total budget. Apart from this, the authorities can borrow from the new housing bank to build collective colonies for workers. The interest rate is 6 per cent.

Given 20 Years

Private initiative is encouraged by loans at the same rate of interest. The minimum loan will be 300,000 pesos. Farmers and industrialists will be compelled to build workers' houses to comply with modern requirements. One part of the law is specially designed to improve the housing conditions of the "inquilino"—the worker on a rural estate who, with his family, is given a house and a piece of land to work for his own account, with the obligation to work on the same estate for the "patron."

Farmers are given 20 years to bring all these "inquilino" quarters up to modern standards—a 5 per cent replacement every year, to begin immediately. Capitalists running permanent industries are given only five years to comply with the law, their housing colonies to be built beyond the urban limits and within one mile and a half of the factory.

To aid farmers and industrialists to comply with thsee dispositions, besides having the loan facilities of the new bank, they can also borrow at the same rate of interest from the Agrarian, Mining, Coal and Industrial banks—the institutions which emerged from the Socialist regime five years ago. They are subject to heavy fines—500 pesos per house per year—if they fail to carry out the building program prescribed by law.

The direct action of the Housing Bank is aimed preferentially for "the construction of workers' houses by the bank itself, for long-term sale or renting to foremen with large families, for the clearance and replacement of slum tenements and analogous dwelling places, and for the urbanization of existing working class settlements."

The Superior Housing Council has been formed in Santiago with a combination of all the foregoing cooperative elements and the addition of architectural specialists to guarantee some artistic touches to the new workers' dwellings which, for economic reasons alone, must be somewhat drab and uniform.

Too Much

"I understand, Bridget, that late last night you had a policeman in to supper, and that he finished the cold mutton."

"Well, ma'am, you can't expect me to start cooking hot meals for any policeman at that time of night!"—Tit-Bits.

Anglo-US Pact

mitted to hold the threat of economic death over the employer if he does not accept their terms. Bargaining is no longer such if the free exercise of the will of any one of the bargainers is thwarted by fear or threat of reprisals."

Mr. Hook is believed to speak for a large section of chamber membership and a drive from the present convention to revise the Wagner law is confidently anticipated.

Mr. Hook coupled his attack with warning to employers that "any plant that is not truly endeavoring to bring its work week down to approximately 40 hours is storing up trouble for itself later."

John D. Black of Chicago, member of Silas Strawn's law firm, charged the Wagner Act was "likely to enlarge the extent of federal regulation of business" which he said the Chamber of Commerce had "rightly" opposed for years, asserted that it might make for "bigger and better strikes," and attacked the "one-sideness of the law."

"There is already talk," he continued, "of an amendment to the law to impose upon labor and labor unions responsibilities of like kind as those now imposed by it upon employers . . . . There will be, for there should be, a real movement to make the law more fair."

Mr. Sibley, in his keynote address, pledged full support of the chamber to the Roosevelt economy drive and gave what appeared to be an oblique reference to the New Deal when he reviewed the changes which 25 years have brought to government. President Taft, he pointed out, was "struggling for efficiency and economy" when the chamber was organized, at a time when federal expenditures were $900,000,000 a year. Today, he recalled, they are $7,500,000,000. Back in 1912 federal civil service rolls held only 370,000; today the number is 800,000. In 1912, the national debt was $900,000,000. On June 30, said Mr. Sibley, it will be more than $35,000,000,000.

In pledging support to Mr. Roosevelt's economy drive, Mr. Sibley added, "in the early days the chamber and its whole membership supported the President of the United States in his efforts to cut down expenditures. I am certain there will be like response on the part of every one of us to the efforts being made now by the President to prevent new expenditures. But so long as the Federal Government continues to carry the burden of unemployment relief without curtailment, difficulties involved in bringing the federal budget into the long-sought-for balance remain unsolved."

A feature of the chamber's opening session was the banquet of the American section of the International Chamber of Commerce at which John Foster Dulles analyzed "fundamentals which lead to peace" while Eliot Wadsworth of Boston, told how the support for the Hull reciprocal trade agreement plan had been cultivated and mobilized.

One cause for war, said Mr. Dulles was the resort by governments to "emotional appeal" and to promotion of mass thinking to influence the action of their nationals. Referring primarily to Germany, Italy and Russia, he declared there was "no lack of tendency in the same direction elsewhere."

It was to the Hull program that Mr. Farrell and other speakers at the world trade round table largely devoted themselves. The trade agreements and America's domestic recovery, said Mr. Farrell, "have been of substantial advantage to the world in general." He cited the recent report of the British commercial counselor at Washington, H. O. Chalkley, on the devaluation of the dollar and American gold policy as aiding other nations.

Mr. Chalkley was quoted as writing: "It is impossible to estimate the indirect profits and stimulation to trade and industry which the United States gold policy has brought to other countries. It is certain that the general benefits have by far exceeded the particular depressive effects and that the balance of advantage has heavily favored all British countries."

against the international compact here involved," Justice Sutherland wrote at the beginning of the opinion.

"We take judicial notice of the fact that, coincident with the assignment set forth in the complaint, the President recognized the Soviet Government, and normal diplomatic relations were established between that government and the Government of the United States, followed by an exchange of Ambassadors," the opinion continued.

"The effect of this was to validate, so far as this country is concerned, all acts of the Soviet Government here, involved from the commencement of its existence. The recognition, establishment of diplomatic relations, the assignment and agreements with respect thereto, were all parts of one transaction, resulting in an international compact between the two governments.

"That the negotiations, acceptance of the assignment and agreements and understandings in respect thereof were within the competence of the President may not be doubted.

"Governmental power over internal affairs is distributed between the national government and the several States. Governmental power over external affairs is not distributed, but is vested exclusively in the national government. And in respect of what was done here, the Executive had authority to speak as the sole organ of that government.

"In respect of all international negotiations and compacts and in respect of our foreign relations generally, State lines disappear. As to such purposes the State of New York does not exist.

"Within the field of its powers, whatever the United States rightfully undertakes it necessarily has warrant to consummate. And when judicial authority is invoked in aid of such consummation, State constitutions, State laws and State policies are irrelevant to the inquiry and decision. It is inconceivable that any of them can be interposed as an obstacle to the effective operation of a Federal constitutional power."

Philippines Face Serious Situation On Trade Problem

What Is Likely To Happen After Independence Is Granted Discussed

BY WILBUR BURTON
"The Asiatic Review,"

With or without independence the Philippines face a serious situation if their present market in the United States is more curtained than by the present Tydings-McDuffie Law up to the sixth or seventh years of the Commonwealth. For example, 60 per cent, in value of all Philippine exports is sugar, and without the American market the sugar industry will be ruined, because there is no other outlet for production. And on an equal basis, Cuban sugar is cheaper than that of the Philippines. In other lines production could continue without a free American market through extensive wage-reduction; today the Philippine standard of living is by far the highest in all Asia, and this has been made possible only through the integration of the island economy with that of the United States. Economically, American rule has been more profitable to the islands than to the United States.

Further, there are very serious doubts in many quarters—non-Filipno as well as Filipino—about the ability of a Philippine Republic to pursue an independent existence in the hectic Oriental world of today. The Commonwealth Government, of course, must exude official optimism, but absolute certainty is not registered even in the Malacanan. The writer asked President Quezon and Vice-President Osmena the same question: "Do you believe that the Philippines by 1945 will be able to stand alone in the present Far Eastern world?" and Mr. Quezon answered in categorical affirmative, but Mr. Osmena replied, "I am not too sure."

So far there have been no economic preparations for independence. The present period is one of great uncertainty, and hence not encouraging for investments of a permanent nature. President Quezon hopes that the trade conference scheduled with the United States this year will remove some of the present uncertainty and pave the way for economic readjustment, but any trade concessions on the part of the United States which are favorable to the Philippines will undoubtedly be opposed by the same groups that have been seeking to get rid of the islands.

Political preparations for independence have included an extensive militarization program under Field-Marshal Douglas MacArthur, former chief of the American General Staff, who is military adviser to President Quezon. By this program the entire physically fit male population will be conscripted and trained in ten years. Twenty thousand will be trained at a time, beginning this year. According to Field-Marshal MacArthur, this plan will make the islands impregnable. Actually, it is believed in well-informed circles that the real plan is to tie up the Philippine army with a continuation of American naval bases after "independence"—which would provide better defense of the islands than now exists, but would probably also mean some sort of American protectorate. Prior to the Commonwealth there was only a small volunteer Filipino army and not many more American regulars, with the result that the burden of defense rested almost entirely on the Asiatic Fleet of the American Navy.

There are no major internal questions to disturb the Philippines. There is a certain amount of agrarian unrest in consequence of usury and tenancy, but nature generally is kind, and while there is considerable maldistribution of population, there is no over-population in the islands as a whole. President Quezon has launched a grandiose scheme of settlement in Mindanao, the sparsely settled second largest of the islands, to relieve over-population in Luzon, the largest island (where Manila is located), and the Visayan (middle) islands. There are also political implications in the project, for it is in Davao, Mindanao, that the Japanese have established a large and thriving stronghold.

In parts of Mindanao and the other southern islands, especially Sulu, there are the somewhat dissident group of 500,000 Mohammedan Moros—the only important non-Christian section of the 14,000,000 population. They were converted to the creed of Islam about four centuries ago, and thereby acquired a higher degree of culture than the rest of the Filipinos then possessed. Further, they started conquest of all of the islands, and probably would have succeeded if the Spanish had not intervened. This was just after Spain's wars with the Moors, with whom the early Spanish invaders in the Philippines confused the Malay Mohammedans: hence the name Moro, which is Spanish for Moor.

While Spain prevented Moro conquest of the non-Mohammedan areas of the Philippines, she never succeeded in bringing the Moros under her sway. Nor did the United States do so until about 1910. Thus the Moros acquired a considerable reputation for ferocity and, having regard to their traditional hatred of the Christianized Filipinos, many observers predicted dire consequences if the Americans withdrew from the Islamic areas. Actually, the Moros offer no serious obstacle to the peace of the islands unless they should be stirred up from outside. Compared to the present-day Filipinos, they are backward and disunited, nor is their antagonism to the Christian Filipinos now very pronounced. But they still could be utilized in the same way that the Mongols have been in Manchuria and the extra-mural regions of North China, and in at least some Moro areas Japanese agents have already been active.

This is another important aspect of the fear among most of the politically conscious Filipinos that the island would not be capable of standing alone in the present Far Eastern world. Indeed, one hears everywhere from Manila to Jolo in Sulu this belief voiced: "The ultimate destiny of the Philippines is not American sovereignty or independence, but American or Japanese sovereignty."

Japan's efforts to penetrate the Philippines antedate her present bid for empire by almost 500 years. In 1440, 81 years before Magellan's discovery of the islands, Japanese pirates established little kingdoms in northern Luzon. Shortly after the Spanish occupation, Hideyoshi, famed war-lord, planned to invade the islands, but he was placated by two Spanish tribute embassies. In 1580 a Japanese pirate fleet did attempt to invade Luzon, but were repulsed. In 1592 an envoy of Hideyoshi came to Manila and entered into diplomatic relations with the Spanish, which resulted in a Japanese-Philippine offensive and defensive alliance, but this was quickly broken through the massacre of several Spanish Catholic missionaries in Japan. Meanwhile, however, Japanese immigrants started coming to the islands, and by 1609 there were 3,000 near Manila. Record of them is lost, but it is believed they were massacred in the suppression of a native revolt a few years later.

From that time until near the end of the Spanish occupation there was little contact between Japan and the Philippines. The first Japanese consulate was established in Manila in 1888, was closed in 1893, and reopened in 1896. There were then only 16 Japanese in the city. In the same year there was a native revolt against the Spanish, and the Japanese agreed to supply arms to the insurgents, but the rising was crushed before the arms arrived. But in the revolt of 1898 against the Spanish, and in subsequent warfare against the Americans, Japanese did supply the Filipinos with arms, while Marquis Ito urged Japanese intervention to obtain Philippine independence.

Since the American occupation there has been a slow, steady Japanese migration to the Philippines until the Japanese population today numbers from 24,000 to 30,000; exact figures are lacking because there has been no census since 1918. While the number of immigrants is small, never more than about 1,000 a year, they are obviously selected and supported by their Government for definite economic purposes. About 15,000 have settled in Davao, and have there obtained through freehold or leasehold 58,000 hectares of the 120,000 hectares of cultivated land in the area. The Philippine land laws are designed to prevent alien ownership, and Japanese freeholds have been acquired by various devices: marriages with Bagobo (mountain tribe) women, and an arrangement whereby Japanese owners are ostensibly the tenants of Filipinos. However, according to President Quezon, "there is no direct evidence of illegal occupation." Through the Davao development about 45 per cent. of the total hemp production is in Japanese hands and Japan takes about one-third of the total hemp export.

Japanese trade penetration has been pronounced only within the past five years. The Filipinos have never shown much enterprise nor efficiency in commerce, and the bulk of the retail trade was long in Chinese hands without serious competition. The Chinese bazaars sold considerable Japanese goods, but Japanese imports were not large. In 1931, after Japan started her conquest of Manchuria, the Chinese merchants throughout the South Seas started an anti-Japanese boycott. In consequence, Japanese merchants, with the backing of their Government, began entering the Philippines in large numbers in 1932 and opened larger and cheaper bazaars than the Chinese operated. Today fully one-fourth of the retail trade throughout the islands is directly or indirectly in Japanese hands; the Chinese merchants are, in self-interest, now forced to promote the sale of Japanese goods, and some of them are financially backed by Japanese firms.

The greatest Japanese trade advance has been in textiles, which is the largest single import. Up to 1935 the Philippines were the largest foreign market for American textiles, which were imported by Americans and retailed by Chinese. From 1932 to 1935 Japanese textile imports steadily mounted, and the Philippine Assembly prepared to impose a high tariff on them. This plan was halted by Washington, presumably because it would have brought retaliation against American imports into Japan, and the previously mentioned "gentlemen's agreement," effective January 1, 1936, was negotiated instead. By this measure Japan was to be limited, direct or via Hongkong, to exporting 50,000,000 square meters of piecegoods, roughly half of the total consumption, to the Philippines. There was no limit on rayon. Nor could the agreement prevent imports from the Japanese mills in Shanghai. There is also doubt whether it is Japan or the Japanese merchants who have failed to observe the agreement; in any event, 75 per cent of the cotton piecegoods and 98 per cent of the rayon now consumed are coming from Japanese mills. Total Japanese imports now amount to more than £2,600,000 annually, while Philippine exports to Japan are only half that amount.

In natural resources the islands are far more tempting than any part of China, even of Manchuria. The

Japan's Dependence On Marine Products Told

1,521,916 Persons Engaged In Marine Industry In Japan During 1934

By MITSUGI TESHIGAWARA

Viewed from the standpoint of national economy the marine-products industry is one of the most important primary industries of our country. In 1930, the total output of primary industries amounted to ¥3,623,000,000. Of this ¥2,354,000,000 was the amount for agricultural products, while the amount for the marine products was ¥411,000,000. This was 11.4 per cent of the total products of primary industries.

In 1934, the total number of people who were engaged in the marine industry was 1,521,916. Of these, 1,103,346 (73 per cent of the total number) were engaged in fishery; 151,007 were engaged in fish raising, while 267,563 belonged to the line of manufacturing.

Present conditions

¥173,137,000 was the amount obtained by coastal fishing in 1934. Although shellfish and seaweeds showed increased figures, fish and other marine creatures showed decreased figures when compared with that of 1933. These products were chiefly obtained in districts like Hokkaido, Nagasaki, Mie, Yamaguchi, Shizuoka, Ehime, Aichi, Iwate and Chiba prefectures.

Fish occupies 74 per cent of the total product of coastal fishery. About 93 per cent of the total fishermen are engaged in coastal fishery, plays an important role in the marine economy of our country, and at the same time it is a basic industry of fishing villages of our country. We must also remember that the Japanese pupulace can obtain a good deal of sanitary food from coastal fishery as they obtain sanitary food from agriculture.

In Japan, since ancient times fishing villages were constituted everywhere along the coast, and the inhabitants of these fishing villages considered the fishing places as their farms or forests, and were leading peaceful lives as fishermen going in and out from their native villages to the fishing areas. They were leading lives like that of farmers who go to farms and forests in the morning and return home in the evening to enjoy the pleasures of their happy homes.

Formerly, since the fishing areas which belonged to the fishing villages had been confined within a narrow limit, the principles of honesty and mutual help had been maintained satisfactorily. Naturally, the coastal fishing places were controlled and utilized in the spirit of mutual help and for the welfare of the fishing villages.

In course of time, however, the fine customs of fishing villages disappeared, and competition among the fishermen gradually began to take place in the fishing areas.

At present, there are about 50,000 licenced fisheries; half of these and some 10,000 permitted fisheries are in the hands of individuals and money making companies. Nowadays, competition is taking place even in the case of licenced fisheries. The evils which result from free fishery are still greater.

Formerly coastal fishery was managed by the villages, but now it is managed by individual enterprises. Naturally, the management of coastal fishery has become very much complicated, and at the same time it has become more and more transient and speculative. Herein lies the reason for the impoverishment of the fishing villages of our country.

According to statistics of the Department of Agriculture and Forestry the value of the total number of fish caught in Japan Proper amounts to about ¥330,000,000. It is said that since many of the marine industrialists give false reports in consideration of the tax the aforementioned figures are supposed to be less than the actual figures which are estimated to be about ¥500,000,000. In fact, if we add the fish caught in the colonies and in Russian territory the value almost amounts to ¥700,000,000. These figures become the keynote of the marine industry of our country.

The fishery of Japan secures the highest position both in the point of quantity of fish caught and in the point of its value. Although Japan catches 53 per cent of the total number caught yearly in the world, she can obtainly only 20 per cent of the total value. This phenomenon clearly shows the crudeness of Japan's fishery. This is because the greater part of the firsh caught is used for manure or for fodder, and not much is being used for food. Japan has 70 per cent of the fishing boats. These figures tell us the fact that the fishery of Japan in the past had been carried on in a very small scale. In the past, the method of manufacturing was not so much advanced when compared with that of foreign countries. Of late years, however, the method of fishery has greatly advanced, and deep-sea fishery is being carried on even in the Arctic Ocean, the Pacific Ocean, the Antarctic Ocean by means of large fishing boats of various types. Owing to the progress of the packing industry a great quantity of tinned salmon and trout is being manufacture every year.

Position of Marine Industry

Although fishery had been greatly carried on in our country, since the days of old it had not yet been treated as a modern industry. It was only of late years that the importance of the marine industry was recognized. In Japan the affairs concerning fishery are controlled by the Department of Agriculture and Forestry, and the supervision of factory management and selling of manufactured fish food-stuffs are controlled by the Department of Commerce and Industry.

The fish caught in the deep-sea are tinned and made into various food-stuffs at the factories with which the boats are being equipped. Most of the manufactured foodstuffs are not being sold at the fishing villages or at the fishing places, but they are sent to the place of consumption hundreds of miles away. Some of the manufactured foodstuffs are even sent to the markets of Europe or America.

In the case of whaling which is carried on far away in the Antarctic Ocean 7 or 8 thousand nautical miles away, the extracting of oil is being done on the deck of the whaling boats. The extracted oil is being sent to the markets of Europe and America as material for artificial butter. It is expected that in future the artificial butter manufactures will be carried on even in Japan using whale oil as material.

Thrift, Discipline And Eagerness Are Among Qualities Seen In Classrooms

By W. H. CHAMBERLAIN

If the child is father to the man, the school, which forms many of the thoughts and habits of the child, may fairly be considered one of the chief factors in making the man or woman. Just as I have often seen in Moscow classrooms a mirror of future Soviet citizens, so a recent visit to a Japanese primary school in a working-class district of Tokyo left several strong impressions of Japanese life and character.

The first impression was one of simplicity, even bareness, of endeavoring to convey the maximum amount of instruction at the minimum cost. The paint on the low desks at which the children sat in their tiny chairs was faded, and this was also true of the teachers' desks. In every room there was a single large blackboard, which the teacher alone used; one or two children's drawings were the only decorations. My Japanese companion and I stood during the period of our visit; there was not an extra chair anywhere.

Both teachers and pupils were very simply dressed in foreign-style clothes. Every classroom was crowded to capacity, 60 being the smallest number in any class which I visited.

Every Child Attends

Among Japan's achievements none is perhaps more striking or significant than the giving of elementary education to every child between the ages of six ad 12. No other Oriental country remotely approaches this ideal. In the Philippines, which has the best educational record in the East after Japan's, about half the children attend school. The lack of any elaborate equipment, the cheap dresses of the teachers (an elementary school teacher, if a woman, starts at a salary of 45 yen—a little over $13 a month; if a man, at a salary of 55 yen), the classes, tremendously large by American standards, all indicate the strain which is imposed by Japan's fulfilment of the order of the Emperor Meiji that education should be universal.

Yet, just as the material poverty of Japanese daily life has its compensations in the almost universal politeness of the people in their dealings with each other, in their enjoyment of simple beauties and inexpensive pleasures, so the work of the school proceeded more smoothly and efficiently than one might have imagined, in view of the physical deficiencies. The discipline in the crowded classrooms was superb.

The teacher always spoke in gentle, subdued tones; the children, although they showed a keen interest in their subjects, never shouted or created any disturbance. When a boy was called on to recite he stood up straight and stiff, holding his book ceremoniously in front of him, apparently at a prescribed distance. The tone and manner of his recitation suggested the future soldier reporting to his superior officer, an impression which was strengthened by the uniform which all male students, beginning with very little boys, must wear.

Habitually Obedient To Their Elders

The effortless discipline was so impressive that one of my first questions to the woman principal of the school was how it was achieved. She smiled and, with typical Japanese self-deprecation, said the discipline was not perfect, as teachers must often rebuke the pupils. She attributed the calm and order mainly to the fact that Japanese children at home are very obedient to their elders.

During the intermission between classes we walked in the halls and every child who passed us immediately became very serious and dignified and gave a low bow, with hands held stiffly at the sides.

We visited classes in music, reading, drawing, history, handicraft work, and writing of the Chinese characters on which the Japanese written language is largely based. The time required for memorizing these complicated hieroglyphs is, incidentally, a serious additional burden for the Japanese pupil. In writing, the children made use of the brush, not of the pen. The teacher first wrote the character on the blackboard, stroke by stroke, the children rhythmically following her movements with their hands in the air before using their brushes.

In the history class the children began by reciting loudly and in unison, with the peculiar Oriental singsong intonation, the names of the first hundred Japanese Emperors. Then the teacher gave a talk on the rise of the Shogunates in the Middle Ages. The children listened attentively; but there were few questions and answers, there was little interchange of ideas.

In the handicraft period one class was at work making a small swing out of various little colored sticks. In another room the pupils were learning to mend Western stockings and Japanese "tabi," or white cotton socks. From all the classes one carried away the impression that the children were being schooled in the qualities of thrift, hard work, attention to the care of small things, politeness, and above all, obedience to authority. But one also felt that the Japanese school curriculum is not calculated to cultivate initiative or original and independent thinking.

The stories in the textbooks seemed almost naive, even for children of 10 or 11, and always pointed some very obvious moral. Classes in ethics held twice a week, inculcate respect for the qualities which have always been rated most highly in Japanese morality: loyalty, industry, filial devotion and, first of all, reverence for the Emperor.

Pictures of the reigning Emperor and Empress are guarded with sacred care in a locked cupboard in the principal's room. Day and night a teacher is on duty especially to look out for these pictures; they are the first objects to be saved in the event of a fire. I noticed that pupils invariably bowed deeply as they passed the cupboard where the pictures are kept. Twice a month the pupils gathered in assembly to bow solemnly in the direction of the Imperial Palace and of the Grand Shrine of Ise, which is sacred to the memory of the Impeiral ancestors.

The most impressive ceremony in the school is the periodic prescribed reading of the Emperor Meiji's fa-gloves, and with the Philippines and several other countries in respect of cotton piece goods. And not only is the quantity to be exported controlled by these associations, but in many cases prices are also controlled, often by means of an export levy fixed by the exporters' associations.

Difficulties Recognized

The Japanese government recognizes the difficulties which the rapid growth of the export trade has caused the rest of the world. At last year's Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations at Yosemite two important pronouncements were made. Dr. Yamakawa, formerly chief of the Bureau of Legislation, stated that "the Japanese understand that inconveniences were caused to others by the sudden rise of Japanese industrialization and are quite prepared to take into consideration the wishes of other parties." And Mr. Yoshizawa, who was Minister of Foreign Affairs in 1932, declared that "Japan had no intention or ambition to monopolize the world's trade or divide the world's markets with this or that power. Japan's desire was to promote her trade interests in a peaceful way, and Japan was free to conclude trade agreements on the basis of reciprocity and fair play."

There is reason to believe that the Japanese government would welcome an extension of the system of regulating its export trade by means of internationally agreed quotas between industrialists, and at the present moment a bill is being prepared to be introduced into the Japanese Imperial Diet, for the further control of the nation's foreign trade. The Japan Economic Federation has suggested that the new bill, in providing means for export price control, should also take measures to adjust and improve "the existing system for inspection of export articles and to adopt strict regulations regarding the qualifications of exporters. To set up councils of Japanese traders, with trade commissioners and consuls as their nucleus, at important points of the world, to fix fair conference prices and to prevent dumping. It is at the same time suggested to encourage the cooperative sales organization of exporters."

In conclusion, it must be recognized that the Japanese small-scale industry has come to stay more or less in its present form, and that it is not merely the embryonic stage large-scale industry. Furthermore, it is an experiment which the rest of the world may find it well worth while to watch carefully, and it may be that it will afford a lesson for similar development in countries like India and China, and even for western countries faced with problems of rural depopulation. It may show that even quite small-scale industries can be successfully cartelized, and for western nations suffering from unemployment its small-scale electric bulb industry, at all events, is worthy of careful examination.

Protection Urged

work were those of page-boys, lift-boys, and attendants in hotels and places of entertainment who were engaged for both "long and late hours." The hours of employment were often spread over long periods of the day. The Juvenile Employment Committees in London investigated the conditions of work of 8,417 page-boys and attendants, of whom no fewer than 7,030 were reported to work over 72 hours a week, including meals and rest intervals. The intervals varied from 24 hours a week in London to 15 in the country, and in the case of cinemas were 10¾ hours. Numerous cases of long hours worked by page-boys in hotels were cited by witnesses. Some of the shifts, for instance, carried boys on until midnight. The Manchester University Settlement and other organizations presented evidence of young people working from 12 to 15 hours a day, and in one case up to 84 hours in a week.

The Departmental Committee reported that there was a definite need for the regulation of the hours of the young persons who formed the subject of their inquiry. They held that there was a substantial proportion of excessive hours among van-boys, page-boys, and lift-boys, that night employment is a problem in certain occupations, and that the long spread-over in connection with work as page-boys and attendants at cinemas kept young people all day at the disposal of the employer and prevented opportunities for continued education and recreation. They also pointed out that in London and other large cities a considerable amount of time has to be spent in traveling to and from work. While the Committee ask that immediate steps should be taken to reduce the normal working week to 48 hours, exclusive of intervals for meals and rest, they held that a week of 48 working hours for young people "is definitely too long to afford the necessary opportunities for continued education and recreation." They desired to see comprehensive legislation introduced which should aim at restricting the working week for all young persons "to something substantially less than 48, with suitable provision for daytime education."

The Committee on Wage-Earning Children hope that the Government will take active steps without delay to give full protection to all young persons under 18 and that their working week will be limited in future to 40 hours without overtime or night work.

Coast Guards' Life Shown In Sea Devils

Abounding with action and suspense that often reach unusual dramatic heights, RKO Radio's "Sea Devils" opened at the Hibiya Gekijo today. It proved itself thrilling screen entertainment.

The picture is the first to deal on a large scale with the activities of the U. S. Coast Guard. Two exciting rescues at sea, one of the crew and passengers of a burning liner and one of the personnel of a yacht blown ashore during a hurricane, and the attempted demolition of a big iceberg off the Newfoundland coast, are among the more spectacular scenes.

Against this colorful background has been painted the romance and rivalry of the human story. Victor McLaglen, a hard-bitten Chief Petty Officer of the Coast Guard, has a daughter, Ida Lupino, whom he hopes to see married to one of his shipmates, Donald Woods. Into this scheme of things comes Preston Foster, a roving coast guardsman with an eye for feminine beauty, and the plot begins to thicken, building up to one crisis after another with fine dramatic effect.

Vividly realistic battles between McLaglen and Foster at sea and ashore, and lifelike incidents of Coast Guard work are woven into the story, and the brilliant performances of its cast make the picture as convincing as it is exciting. McLaglen's portrayal is perhaps his best since the memorable "The Informer." Foster scores sharply as the devil-may-care seaman, and Miss Lupino is charming as the heroine, with Woods giving a finely sensitive depiction of Foster's rival. Helen Flint, Gordon Jones, Murray Alper, Billy Gilbert and Pierre Watkin stand out in the supporting cast.

Many of the scenes were filmed aboard one of the sea-going cutters of the Service, and the whole picture bears an unmistakable stamp of authenticity that adds greatly to its realism. Ben Stoloff's direction of the Edward Small production, and the story and screen play by Frank Wead and John Twist likewise come in for approval for their share in making "Sea Devils" a really outstanding film.

US Board Plans Big Extension In Merchant Marine

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, May 4—Under the chairmanship of Joseph P. Kennedy the new United States Maritime Commission, it is learned today, is on the verge of embarking upon an extensive program of new merchant ship construction intended to keep the American flag abreast of leading foreign flags in a revived world shipping industry.

First step in New American merchant tonnage construction is to be a third big passenger liner for the Atlantic run, bids for which are today being examined by agents for the commission which is to provide a construction loan and representatives of the United States Lines which wants the ship to make posible a regular weekly service from New York to European ports.

But this long-deferred addition of a third unit to the fleet of passenger liners of the U. S. Lines is to be only the first step in a campaign to regain for America a place on the high seas. Other nations, primarily Britain and Japan, are already building new commercial tonnage at a fast rate and are securing the lion's share of increased world trade due partly to European rearmament.

Program Under Way

Preliminaries to such a program are well under way. Liquidation of the obsolete fleet of 188 World War vintage ships now on the commission's hands is being pressed. Twenty eight of these old ships have been put up for sale as scrap. Contracts have been let and work is under way now for drydocking the 54 ships tied up in the James River as a preliminary to their early disposal. Only those with real commercial value will be offered for sale or charter. All others will be sold on condition that they be scrapped. The desire is to make way for as much modern tonnage as possible to put American lines in a competitive position with new foreign tonnage.

The increase in world shipping during recent months is indicated by the fact that there has been a decrease of 57 per cent in the amount of idle merchant tonnage in Great Britain since January. Whereas there were 870 idle ships in that country at the depth of the depression there are today only 77, most of which are not in a seagoing condition. The demand for the reconditioning of old tonnage where new ships are not available has reached the point where the maritime commission is receiving daily inquiries about its old tonnage much of which is completely out of date.

Aid to Shipbuilding

Mr. Kennedy is understood, however, to be reluctant to see much of the old tonnage put back into service, both because it would suffer from the competition of newer types in foreign hands and because a function of the commission is stimulation of the shipbuilding industry as well as of shipping. Japan is now taking a strong lead in improved merchant types with freighters capable of from 18 to 22 knots speed, far faster than any of the old American merchant ships.

One obstacle to new American constuction is a feature of the Merchant Marine Act which permits the comraission to build new ships and charter them at an annual rate of 5 per cent of the construction cost. Chartering at such a rate, it is pointed out, would be much cheaper for most operators than building and operating their own ships. A modification of the law to restore an incentive, to private construction is under consideration at the commission.

Meanwhile a staff of 40 lawyers and experts borrowed from the Interior and Post Office departments and from the RFC and PWA are at work on the liquidation of existing mail contracts and preparation of the new operating subsidy schedules which must go into effect on July 1 under requirements of the act.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

Triple Divide Peak

Triple Divide Peak, in Glacier National Park, is the only place on the American continent from which the rain will flow into three oceans—the Arctic, Pacific and Atlantic. From its northern slope, water flows through the Norris Creek and St. Mary Lake to Hudson Bay and the Arctic; from its eastern slope, through Cut Bank Creek into the Missouri and the Gulf of Mexico; and from its western slope, through Nyack Creek into Flathead River, thence to Clark Fork of the Columbia and the Pacific.

US Rail Stations Showing Movies

N. Y. Times

NEW YORK, May 2—Railway terminals, once little more than dreary train sheds, have been gradually assembling under their roofs the facilities of caravansary, bazaar and oasis resort. Scarcely a week passes that some new feature is not added for the convenience, comfort and entertainment of travelers. Those waiting for trains find in them many sources of amusement and interest.

Latest of the innovations for the entertainment of waiting passengers are moving-picture theaters, and tomorrow one will open in Grand Central Station. South Station in Boston is similarly equipped, and there are cinema houses in several Western terminals.

These "sight and sound" station theaters seem destined to become part of the general service to the traveling public at the main terminals. At every station there are always people who have time to spare. Perhaps an hour is the average maximum of this more or less enforced leisure. The period, whatever it may be, is too brief for seeking amusement elsewhere. The terminal movie cuts its program into short sections—newsreels and comedy pieces or animated cartoons—about the beginning or end of which no great strain is imposed on curosity.

Spaciously Planned

Aisles in terminal film houses are broad and the spaces between rows of seats all wider than those in the usual theater. One is thereby enabled to reach or leave a seat quickly without discommoding other patrons.

On each side of the proscenium arch is a clock with an illuminated dial to keep the audience posted as to the passage of time. The theater here has 300 seats. Tickets are to be without reference to the length of the auditor's stay. He will remain, on the average, only a short while, and that makes for a continuous and rapid turnover.

Transients are the mainstay of such places. As many large terminals in this country are close to hotels or are even linked to them by underground passages, tourists are likely to patronize the convenient railroad cinemas. Owners or operators have to supply all the appointments and safety devices—fire-escapes and fire exits—required of the conventional house.

The auditorium must be so arranged that if it is to be emptied in a hurry all patrons will be able to find their way quickly outdoors into the street.

Other Attractions

Passengers awaiting trains easily surrender to the conveniences and attractions housed in the huge self-contained communities which American railroad terminals have come to be. Resigning their baggage to attendants who see that it is stored and checked, they explore their temporary surroundings.

They discover outfitting arcades and veritable bazaars where they can buy anything needed to satisfy immediate wants. The railroad stations of today—unlike those of yesterday which supplied iron rations—now contain restaurants and lunch-counters that offer much or little, as desired.

Italy Honoring

to iron out discrepancies in income, and the feeling that as everyone else was suffering during the depression highly paid executives should also suffer. Business conditions must not be forgotten either. Companies were in the "red," dividends were being reduced or passed, unemployment was acute and estimated as high as 15,000,000 men and women, and receivership and bankruptcy were common.

These reasons and the frequent charge that the New Deal Government was after scalps are among those usually advanced to explain the pressure which led to the disclosure of salary information.

Business Leaders Indicted

Fundamentally, however, the situation was even more acute. The business leaders, officers and directors of the large corporations of this country were, consciously or unconsciously, indicted both by the public and by many stockholders, as having failed in their fiduciary relationships with stockholders. In many quarters it was believed that business leaders were exploiting not only stockholders, but the public as well.

The question therefore arose, "Are these men guilty of such charges?" It was the attempt to answer the many accusations of this nature, to convict probably rather than to acquit, which led to forced disclosure of salary information. The large group of uninformed were convinced of the guilt of the entire executive group, and applauded the Government in its hunt for culprits.

These are powerful reasons why the law should play its usual role and come to the assistance of the public and stockholders and insist that executive compensation policies and practices of publicly owned corporations be aired. Such reasons cannot lightly be pushed aside by an unsupported charge that the disclosure would perform no real service.

Since all executives were on public trial, secrecy merely added to the supposition of guilt. Should not executives themselves have welcomed this proposal to disclose salary data?

On the other hand, one can readily sympathize and understand the disturbed attitude of loyal executives, uncertain as to the repercussions of the publication of even very reasonable salary data. It would provide "gossip," possibly give false impressions, and might even react unfavorably on specific companies. Jealousy within a company was bound to be stirred up by the publication of such data. Furthermore, all stockholders were by no means reasonable, nor would they appreciate the real need for large corporate salaries.

Payments Not Scandalous

Before going further into the question of publicity of salary payments it is important to know what they typically were and how payments generally are made. First, executive payment plans should be briefly examined. Probably the mosts prevalent method of paying officers is a combination of cash salary with a bonus in good years.

In 1929, when the compensation of most executives was liberal and unfettered by depression or law, it appeared that about two thirds of the listed companies, both industrial and retail, used some form of a bonus plan in addition to salaries. An additional feature of many of these plans was an arrangement enabling officers to secure stock on an attractive basis.

The second most common method was the payment of straight cash salaries. And in addition to these two methods of compensation were numerous variations such as payment in stock at highly preferential prices in addition to salary.

Monetary Ills Held Barrier To Stabilization

N. Y. Herald Tribune

The economic life of the nation can not be stabilized profitably until problems of economic and monetary theory and of fiscal policy and banking reform are solved, Dr. F. Cyril James, professor of finance in the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania declared recently. Dr. James spoke on "problems of Boom Control" at a luncheon meeting of the Wharton Institute at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, and insisted that "no panacea-program of boot-strap levitation will serve our purpose."

Professor James, who has been named as one of the "twelve men in the United States who understand money, stated that the policy pursued by the monetary authority is among the most far-reaching influences upon the state of business activity.

"Governors of the Federal Reserve System have been dowered with powers greater than those possessed by any other central bank at any period of history," he said. The speaker insisted, however, that before it can be inferred that the Federal Reserve policy will ease this country from economic disequilibrium it must be assumed that the system will exert a quantitative control of the supply of money to offset any increases in its velocity of circulation and that it will prevent unequal development of different fields of business activity. Neither of these assumptions are justified, he declared.

"Throughout the history of the Federal Reserve, policies of monetary expansion have been more popular than policies of contraction, since the latter tend to arouse antagonism in both political and public circles, Dr. James maintained. "Theories of boom-control can not be yoked to the pleasant pastime of deficit spending so that the development of an effective monetary policy of quantitative control is impossible unless effective steps are taken to balance the budget and free the money markets from the pressure of low cost financing of governmental deficits," he said.

Coordination of the banking policy to prevent unequal business expansion is impossible until an efficient banking system is developed, Professor James said.

At a round-table discussion earlier in the day, Miles S. Colean, technical director of the Federal Housing Administration, declared that his agency serves to level off the peaks as well as the valleys of the real estate market, which in turn influence the general business situation.

Vice Commissar For Defense Kills Self

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

MOSCOW, May 31 — Evidently fearing the exposure of his close connections with anti-Government elements, Mr. Ian Borosovich Gamarnik, Vice-Commissar for Defense, and formerly a prominent member of the central committee of the Communist Party, today committed suicide, it was announced in a terse Government communique this afternoon.

Although no details of the time, place nor motives were published, it is learned, however, that he was mentioned as being involved with plots against the Stalin regime.

Maternity Deaths In US Scored

N. Y. Times

NEW YORK, May 7.—The mobilization of public opinion and medical and public health facilities to combat the hazards of maternity, which now cause the "needless" death of about 10,000 mothers and 100,000 infants annually, was urged yesterday at a Mother's Day luncheon conference held by the Maternity Center Association at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria.

About 500 persons, including leaders of the national, State and city public health services, attended. At the speakers' table were Dr. Thomas Parran Jr., Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service; Dr. Edward S. Godfrey, Commissioner of Health of New York State; Dr. John L. Rice, Health Commissioner of New York City; Dr. Charles Gordon Heyd, president of the American Medical Association; Dr. Louis I. Dublin, chief statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and Dr. Albert H. Aldridge, Assistant Clinical Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology at Columbia University. Mrs. Shepard Krech, president of the Maternity Center Association, was toastmaster.

Community Responsibility Cited

Dr. Parran, Dr. Dublin and Dr. Aldridge emphasized the need of community responsibility for curbing "the needless sacrifice of mothers and children." The United States, while maintaining the highest standards of living and medical service, is "disgraced" by the fact that its maternity death rate is the highest of any civilized nation, they said.

"The record of the United States in maternal mortality is not an enviable one," Dr. Parran said. "At least two-thirds of maternal deaths in this country are due to cause which are preventable. This presents a challenge to public health authorities, physicians and laity alike.

"The same one-third of our people who in the words of President Roosevelt are 'poorly housed, poorly clothed and poorly fed' also get poor obstetrical care. Untrained midwives deliver several hundred thousand babies each year, and for at least 40,000 births there is no attendant. For the unemployed, for those living on a subsistence level, for poor farm families, there is no way to provide good obstetrical care except through community responsibility. Can we afford it? We cannot afford the price of continued neglect."

The surgeon general said the four most important causes of needless maternity mortality were poverty, ignorance, unwillingness to bear children and social diseases. Declaring that one out of every sixty infants is born with syphilis, he advocated a compulsory blood test before marriage to rid the nation of the "terrible tragedy" of the syphilitic child.

"Until we shall have lifted the load of poverty," he asserted, "the community can at least share its burden to the extent of giving the minimum essentials of care during pregnancy and at childbirth to those women unable to secure such care for themselves."

National Welfare Jeopardized

Dr. Dublin said that the national welfare is being jeopardized by an "alarming" decline in the birth rate, as a result of the high ratio of maternity and infant deaths on the one hand and the increasing unwillingness of American women to hazard death or injury through childbirth on the other. For several years past this nation has been "increasingly in the red" in the process of its reproduction, he explained.

"We are no longer bringing into the world enough children to insure the future growth, or even maintenance, of our population," he said. "Thus, our crusade to safeguard the lives of mothers and of children is at the same time of campaign to promote the future growth and welfare of our country."

Dr. Aldridge urged "an aroused public opinion" to solve the problem of reducing the toll of mothers and infants who die in childbirth. He pointed out that modern developments in obstetric technique can make motherhood a safe and happy experience.

The Columbia authority declared that early hospitalization of women about to become mothers would make motherhood safer. He explained that about 60 per cent of the mothers of the nation experience childbirth in their own homes and that many of these are attended by untrained midwives. He said that "some suitable effort" must be made to control the midwife and to assure competent obstetric service to those women unable to obtain the advantage of hospitalization.

Recommendations Listed

Four recommendations for the guidance of the prospective mother seeking "ideal maternity" conditions were made by Dr. Aldridge. These were:

1. That when pregnancy is contemplated, she undergo a thorough physical examination to detect the existence of abnormal physical conditions or infections which might be eliminated or improved before conception is allowed to occur.

2. That she report to a competent obstetrician or well-conducted obstetric clinic for routine physical examination as soon as pregnancy is suspected and at regular intervals thereafter until the time of her delivery.

3. That she choose, well in advance of the time of her delivery, a hospital which is known to maintain satisfactory standards of obstetric and nursing care.

4. That she remain under the care of her obstetrician or obstetric clinic for at least six weeks after delivery or until she has regained normal health and strength.

grave in the Church of San Domenico; in March, 1737, his wife died; in December of the same year he followed her. Today his house is so changed he would hardly recognize it. The church where he thought to have perpetual sepulture has been pulled down (in 1869), and the bones of the Stradivari removed to an unmarked common grave. Like Mozart, his mortal resting-place is unknown; a garden and tablet alone show where once he lay. But he is not without memorials. More than thirty years ago three Englishmen, the brothers William Arthur, and Alfred Hill (great experts, violin makers themselves, and descendants of violin makers) issued, compiled, wrote, and published the monumental book upon Stradivari, which stands as the authority for all who wish to undestand the genius and achievements of Antonio Stradivari.

Van Zeeland Going

tions. Like many others, he doubtless deplores the condition to which conflicting national interests and dictatorial self-seeking have reduced the League, although these things are not among the subjects he cares to discuss. But it is pretty generally understood that he is an ardent believer in the League's usefulness as a center for the exchange and diffusion of ideas.

Nothing much can be done by the League just now except to mark time, perform such services as may be innocuous to itself and await a fitting opportunity for such self-strengthening as may render it capable of fulfilling the ideals upon which it was founded. When that time comes there will be need for men of the mental habit and positive convictions of the Belgian Premier, and he is certain to be among those to whom the League will turn for counsel.

For such duties he is eminently suited. The son of a prosperous merchant residing at Soignes, he was a law student at the University of Louvain when the war broke out in 1914, and he enlisted at once. Taken prisoner by the Germans almost at the outset, he spent three years in German prison camps. His health has never fully recovered from that experience.

When peace came he returned to Louvain and completed his university course, following it with a postgraduate year at Princeton, in which he took an M. A. degree. In 1922 he was named Doctor of Political Sciences and Diplomacy at Louvain. For some time afterward he was successively a lawyer practicing in the Court of Appeals in Brussels, in charge of the service of economic studies at the Belgian National Bank and engaged in special financial missions for the Belgian Government. In 1924 he was secretary of the national bank, and at the age of 25 he became vice governor of the bank. He has been lecturer of the Council on International Relations at Johns Hopkins and under the Handley Page and Walter Hines Page Foundations. In 1934 he was a Belgian Minister without portfolio.

When the Belgian Coalition Cabinet collapsed in 1935, and it was clear that the day of the veteran Vandewelde was over, the King sent for Mr. van Zeeland. He was not in Parliament and was considered outside politics, yet King Leopold entrusted to him the task of forma- a Ministry. Within a few hours he had reached an agreement with Liberals and Socialists and had organized a Cabinet which has endured ever since.

That is typical of the man. Tall, courteous, considerate and likable, he has as perhaps his outstanding characteristic the ability, almost at sight, to win confidence and inspire trust. He works hard and constantly, but in social life he has an able collaborator in Mrs. van Zeeland, daughter of the late General Dossin de St. Georges. They have four children, the eldest of whom shares the studies of the royal children.

Premier van Zeeland himself has the full confidence of the King, with whom his relations approach more nearly intimate friendship than is usual between monarch and Prime Minister. He is distinctly a leader of liberal thought among the younger European statesmen, and the world outside is now likely to hear a great deal more of him than it has heard of Belgian Premiers in the past.

Moscow Claims Soviet - Chinese 'United Front'

By DEMAREE BESS

MOSCOW.—From the Soviet point of view, the achievement of a "united front" between Chinese Communists and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek's Nanking Government is the most important development in the Far East in many years. The Nanking-Communist agreement promptly followed and may be regarded as the result of the German-Japanese alliance against Communism. Moscow believes that the one agreement more than counterbalances the other.

Some Soviet diplomats are willing to admit privately that the blunders of their potential enemies have done more than their own diplomatic skill to strengthen the Soviet position in the Far East; just as some Japanese diplomats have openly admitted that the German-Japanese alliance was a blunder of the first magnitude, whose advantages are invisible, if they exist at all; but whose disadvantages are obvious, and are likely to multiply.

At any rate, it is agreed that the German-Japanese "understanding" helped more than any move made by the Soviets to persuade General Chiang to compromise with the Chinese Communists, after insisting for years that it was more important to crush their movement than to resist Japan.

Ever since the Japanese invaded Manchuria in 1931, Chinese Communists have made periodic proposals for a "united front" with Nanking. But General Chiang refused to compromise, and wasted much life and money in driving the Communists from province to province, weakening but never crushing their movement, until they finally settled in the northwest provinces, in close proximity to Soviet-controlled territory.

The Soviets have played their hand carefully. There is no evidence that they have given the Chinese Communists much more than moral encouragement, or that they ever contemplated another such "adventure" in China as that which ended in 1927. Since that time, Moscow has become absorbed in Soviet Russia's internal development, and has evolved a foreign policy like that of any other national state. Its relationships with other countries have become increasingly concerned with the maintenance of peace and the protection of its own territory.

In these ten years, the Soviets have come to share with Great Britain and the United States the desire for a strong central government in China. Moscow has been less interested in the protection of trade and investments in China than in the development of a Chinese Government strong enough to resist Japan, and thus to discourage Japanese aggression against the Soviet Far East.

As matters stand, Moscow can afford to play a waiting game in China. She threw the weight of her influence in support of the Nanking-Communist agreement; she is not likely to do anything which would antagonize General Chiang and his associates so long as that agreement continues in force.

Rumors of Sovie material assistance to Chinese Communists may therefore be heavily discounted. With the "united front" in force, Soviet assistance is more likely to be given to the Nanking Government, as the accepted center of the "united front," rather than to Chinese Communists separately. The latter are sufficiently grateful for Moscow's assistance in concluding an agreement which ensures them against further civil war.

The Soviets welcomed the Chinese "united front" chiefly because they believe it makes a Soviet-Japanese war less likely. It may be true that Chinese revolutionary extremism has at the same time been diluted, but Moscow at present is less concerned in revolutions elsewhere than in security at home. The "united front," so vigorously supported in all countries since 1934 by Moscow's Communist International, has presumably toned down revolutionary extremism everywhere. Such a development is as satisfactory to "nationalist" Russia as to other national governments, with the exception of those which desire to use the "menace" of Bolshevism for their own purposes.

Late Chang Tso-lin Honored With Ceremony

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

MUKDEN, June 2.—Impressive ceremonies were held at the Shoulintzu Temple on the eastern outskirts of the city this morning under the auspices of the Concordia Society of Manchoukuo to honor the remains of the late Marshal Chang Tso-lin, the former "Uncrowned King of Manchuria," nine years after the powerful Manchurian warlord was bombed to death in the summer of 1928 near Huangtun on the Mukden-Shanhaikuan Railway.

More than 400 prominent Japanese and Manchoukuo officials and civilians assembled at the Buddhist temple today to take part in the memorial services for the one-time all powerful ruler of the Northeastern Provinces. Members of the late military leader's families also attended the memorable rites.

$15,000 is Offered As Literary Prize

LAKE FOREST, Ill.,—Fifteen thousand dollars—the largest literary prize offered anywhere in the world for a single book—will be awarded by the Bross Foundation under the administration of Lake Forest College in 1940 for a book as yet unpublished, to be submitted before Sept. 1, 1939.

Announcement of the competition was first made by Dr. Herbert McComb Moore, president of Lake Forest College, October, 1935, over an international radio hook-up through the Chicago studios of the National Broadcasting Company. Telegraph and cable took the message to rulers of important nations at that time.

Posters depicting the purpose of the award are being sent to colleges, universities, and centers of learning throughout the entire world. These announcements are reproduced from a commissioned painting by Milo K. Winter, widely known American illustrator.

The painting shows a student of vision, looking toward spires set against a large white cross, which overshadows factories, libraries, and skyscrapers representing industry, learnings, and science. A globe is beside the student to illustrate the international setting for the competition.

The significance of the cross lies in the stipulation for the contest made by William Bross, who established the foundation. Bross, who was one of Chicago's pioneers and early builders, stated in the trust fund agreement that "at the end of every 50 years . . . . a premium . . . be given, for the best single book on the connection and relation of the humanities and practical sciences with the Christian religion."

The donor of the $15,000 award further specified that the offer must be open to scientific men, the Christian philosophers and historians of all nations. This is the first time the major $15,000 prize has been offered.

The successful author in the present contest will have his volume added to the Bross Library, which already contains fourteen books and lectures selected for previous minor Bross Foundation awards. These differ in amount, and range up to $6,000.

The Bross Library is a collection of commissioned works by world-famous men who are specialists in their fields. Mark Hopkins, one-time president of Williams College, and former president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; Josiah Royce, famous Harvard philosopher; James Huston Finley, former president of Knox College and now associate editor of the New York Times; Robert Bruce Talyor, widely known Scottish minister and professor; and Jeremiah W. Jenks, former professor at Cornell University and New York University, are five of the fourteen recognized by Bross awards for their writings.

Mr. Bross was on the board of trustees of Lake Forest College for twenty-six years, and served as president of this board for a number of years preceding his death. Having always been keenly interested in literature, Bross wanted to encourage writers to a connection between scientific and religious thought. This was his principal aim in establishing the Bross Foundation—to provide an incentive for Christian thinking.

KATHARINE CORNELL MAY COME HERE

Katharine Cornell, one of the foremost English-speaking actresses, is contemplating a tour around the world. The idea has long been in her mind. There are many difficulties and problems to be solved before this can take definite shape, but if it materializes she would like to appear in Hawaii, New Zealand, Australia, Japan, China, the Philippine Islands, Siam, India, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, Greece, Russia, Europe, the Scandinavian countries, England, Ireland, South Africa and possibly South America and Mexico.

Such an extensive tour never has been undertaken by an important American player. Miss Cornell would like to present a repertory of five or six plays, possibly William Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan" and "Candida," Rudolf Besier's "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," another Shakespearean play and an Ibsen drama. This would necessitate a company of thirty or more players. If the venture is undertaken, the plan would be to start in May or June of next year and to continue for a year or eighteen months.

Though an American, Miss Cornell made her first stage success in London, in "Little Women." Her first success in her own country was in "A Bill of Divorcement." Among the plays in which she has acted are "Candida," "The Green Hat," "The Letter," "The Age of Innocence," "Dishonored Lady," "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," "Lucrece," "Alien Corn," "Romeo and Juliet," "Flowers of the Forest," "Saint Joan" and "The Wingless Victory." Except for her appearance in London at the beginning of her career, she never has appeared outside of North America.

Ray Henderson, her representative, may make a preliminary tour around the world, starting in June, to discuss Miss Cornell's appearance in the various countries.

Scotland Marks Coronation By Planting Trees

Christian Science Monitor

EDINBURGH—An appeal to supplement the transitory decorations of the Coronation period with more lasting memorials was made here recently by the Marquis of Lothian, President of the Coronation Planting Committee. The scheme has already been successful in England and Wales.

"We are heirs to a wonderful heritage of beauty," Lord Lothian said. "I have traveled in most of the countries of the world and every time I return to Scotland I am more impressed with its inexhaustible fund of natural beauty and the extraordinary variety of scenery to be found in it.

"Unfortunately each day this precious heritage is being carelessly lost or thoughtlessly spoiled. It is a constant struggle to preserve from irreparable destruction, both Highlands and Lowlands, which are still largely unspoiled and to restore to the industrial midlands some of the beauties which have been destroyed."

The transitory decorations, Lord Lothian said, which enlivened the land during the week of Coronation were at best a passing tribute to a great occasion. Surely they ought to be supplemented by memorials which would be a permanent record of beauty to give pleasure to many generations.

Lord Lothian went on to appeal for vigilance for beauty as well as for freedom. "For instance," he said, "there is no reason why the traffic roundabout should not be a thing of beauty instead of just rubble or plain grass."

Mr. Walter Elliot, Secretary of State for Scotland, commended the idea of tree planting as a memorial. Scotland, he said, had provided half the great gardens throughout the world and yet had provided too few for herself. Up and down the world most of the great gardens were in charge of Scotsmen, but in Scotland the Scot still preferred argument to any other form of recreation!

Mr. Elliot quoted a practical Scot in one of Sir Walter Scott's novels who said, "You should aye be sticking in a tree. It will be growing when you are sleeping." Here indeed was a form of recreation well adapted to their national genius, added Scotland's Secretary of State.

Selfridge Applies To Become Briton

N. Y. Times

LONDON, May 6—H. Gordon Selfridge, who used American methods of merchandising to create the great Oxford Street department stores that bears his name, has decided to become a British subject, because "I expect to live in London the rest of my days and die here and, if I am lucky, be buried here."

Chuckling, he told The New York Times today that "I only applied to the Home Secretary yesterday and I did not expect it to become known so soon."

"As a matter of fact," he added, "most of my friends, both in the United States and London, thought I was a British citizen, or rather, I should say, a British subject already."

H. Gordon Selfridge Jr., who is associated with his father in the management of the Selfridge interests, also is considering transferring his allegiance, but has not yet decided definitely. Mr. Selfridge's three daughters, Princess Wiasemsky, Viscountess Jacques de Sibour and Viscountess Louis de Sibour, also are living in London, but they do not plan to become British subjects, since "two are married to Frenchmen and one to a Russian," their father said.

Is Fond of London

"I had come to like London before on visits," Mr. Selfridge declared, "and now that I have been living here thirty-one years I think it is the most interesting, most cosmopolitan city in the world. I feel more at home in London than anywhere in the world and my friends both in the United States and in England whom I consulted all advised me to become a British subject."

News of their chief's decision quickly spread among the thousands of employes of Selfridge's which has the most elaborate coronation display in the metropolis.

Although his experience with Marshall Field & Co. of Chicago, from which he retired in 1903, taught him the value of newspaper advertising, Mr. Shelfridge has kept his store unique by leaving the huge building without a single sign to indicate its name.

Opened Store in 1909

H. Gordon Selfridge is known variously as the Marshall Field of London and the merchant adventurer of Oxford Street. Thrown on his own by the death of his father when he was 10 years old, he worked at several jobs, eventually becoming connected with the forerunner of the great Chicago department store whose methods he transported to London

He had made a fortune out of retail selling at the age of 39 and had planned to retire after selling his stock in Marshal Field's. While visiting London he was amazed to find what he considered backward ways of merchandising. After studying the situation for three years he opened Selfridge and Company in 1909.

At first the Merchants Association, astonished by his brisk American ways, barred him from membership, but later he became a leading member of the association and a social lion in a city where people "in trade" had always been frowned upon by the aristocracy.

In 1927 his firm absorbed William Whitely & Co., a century-old establishment and at one time Selfridge's greatest rival. Because of this merger Selfridge's became one of the four largest organizations of its kind in the world, employing 13,000 persons, and operating a $50,000,000 group of stores throughout Britain.

In private life Mr. Selfridge is a collector of rare books and engravings, an expert orchid grower, and for many years he has been one of London's most active first-nighters.

He was born at Ripon, Wis., in 1864. In 1890 he married Miss Rose Buckingham of Chicago. His son, H. Gordon Selfridge Jr., is general manager of the Selfridge Provincial Stores.

Borah Promises

singled out for the most revolting massacre of modern times. It was Fascist strategy.

Both Work Subtly

"I doubt very much if we are fully aware of the insidious, subtle effort being put forth in this country by the advocates of that theory of government called fascism," he said. "It has far more supporters in this country than communism and they are much more active and much more adroit in the manner in which they are accomplishing their end.

"They work in wholly different methods from communists. Both are the avowed enemies of democracy, both would destroy individual liberty, both would establish in its place abject economic and political serfdom. There can be no compromise between democracy and either of these systems."

In an eloquent peroration, Senator Borah linked Fascism with Communism as equally opposed to "every vital liberty and every right and privilege of the average man or woman." He concluded, "With conditions in other lands we can have little to say. But their systems should not be permitted to introduce themselves into this country without full knowledge of all the facts.

"From time to time," he promised, "the facts will be given."

Identical Twins As Alike As Two Peas In A Pod

With all the stories in the world to choose from, which story would a shrewd cinema producer pick to coincide with the coronation of a King of England? This was one problem which last year faced Warner Brothers' Associate Executive in Charge of Production Hal Wallis. For a cinema producer, problems never come single. Another and more difficult riddle for Producer Wallis was this: what were the best roles in which to cast two 12-year-old identical twins who looked so much alike that their mother could scarcely tell them apart? One test of a cinema producer is his ability to solve two problems at the same time. Ready for simultaneous release in 275 U. S. cities last week was Producer Wallis' exceedingly neat finesse of his dilemma: Billy & Bobby Mauch in Mark Twain's The Prince and the Pauper, last made as a silent picture with Marguerite Clark playing both roles in 1915.

The Prince and the Pauper starts on the day in 1537 when boy infants are born simultaneously to Henry the VIII in Windsor Palace and to Pickpocket John Canty in Offal Court. Young Prince Edward thrives at the court, under the tutelage of the Duke of Norfolk (Henry Stephenson). Young Tom Canty thrives in the gutter, with Latin lessons from Father Andrew and whackings from his father (Barton MacLane). Prowling about London one day, Tom crawls under a bench outside the castle to take a nap. The Captain of the Guard hauls him out and is giving him a thrashing when Prince Edward comes out of the palace to call his dog. Prince invites pauper indoors to play. They change clothes for a joke, laugh when the mirror shows how much they look alike. Then the Prince runs out again to find his dog. The Captain of the Guard, thinking it is the pauper, resumes his interrupted thrashing, tosses Prince Edward out into the street.

In his story, Author Mark Twain set out to show that palaces were not much better than the people in them. At Windsor, young Tom Canty falls under the wing of the bad Earl of Hertford (Claude Rains) who, when he hears Tom's story about how he got into the place, merely tells King Henry that the Prince is mad. When the old king dies, Hertford plans to execute the Duke of Norfolk and have Tom Canty crowned, with himself as Lord Protector. As things shape up, he seems in a fair way to accomplish it.

Another notion of Mark Twain's was that monarchies would do better if kings saw how their subjects lived. In medieval London's alleys, Edward fares not much better than his counterpart in the palace until he encounters a young soldier of fortune named Miles Hendon (Errol Flynn). Hendon feeds him, humors his apparently preposterous notion that he is the King of England, sets out, when the boy is kidnapped, to rescue him from John Canty's gang of thieves. When the rescue entails fighting off the palace guards, sent to kill the young King before he can return to foil the Hertford plot, Hendon begins to think his young protege's ideas of his own grandeur may not be delusions after all, hurries him back to London.

Biggest scene in the Prince and the Pauper is naturally the Coronation, for which Warners used their big new Stage 22, 100 ft. longer than the lot's ordinary 40-ft. stages; a small army of extras, the St. Luke's Choir and six technical advisers. In this scene Tom Canty, already prayed over, sworn and anointed, is about to get the crown when Prince Edward comes scampering up Westminster Abbey's central aisle to present his claims. When Tom Canty corroborates them, the Archbishop of Canterbury agrees to crown Edward if he can tell the whereabouts of the Great Seal of England. Edward does so with some difficulty. When next seen he is on the throne distributing rewards to those who deserve them, passing laws for the improvement of the slum population, and taking waivers on the Earl of Hertford.

The Prince and the Pauper is not and does not aim to be screen drama Hollywood picture-poem. It does of cosmic import, super-spectacle or aim to be, and is, a frisky, fresh and wholly likable comedy by the best comic writer, for the screen or otherwise, whom the U. S. has yet produced. Directed by William Keighley, acted by Warner Brothers' most high-powered cast since Midsummer Night's Dream, staged by Robert Lord and scored by Erich Korngold it should grace, if not climax, the carrers of two amiable young actors from Peoria, Ill. who, amonk Hollywood's currently swollen quota of remarkable children, are perhaps the most remarkable.

Bill and Bobby Mauch (pronounced mock) are more extraordinary than Shirley Temple because there are two of them. They have an advantage over the Dionnes because they are interchangeable. In The Prince and the Pauper, it is not possible to say which Mauch played which. The original plan was, not to have one play Prince and the other Pauper, but to have Billy play all the palace scenes and Bobby play all the guttersnipe scenes, regardless of which character appeared in them. This plan came to nothing because it suited the Mauch twins' sense of humor to switch from time to time. This was by no means the first trick of the kind they had played. The Mauch brothers got their Hollywood jobs not because they looked alike but because they both look like Fredric March. Producer Wallis, who had been scouring the U. S. for a ten-year-old to play young Anthony in March's Anthony Adverse, found the Mauchs, signed Billy for the part. In Anthony Adverse Bobby Mauch's job was stand-in for his brother. He apparently discharged his duties faithfully. Actually he did nothing of the sort. When the picture was over, he and Billy confessed to Director Mervyn Le Roy that they had switched jobs whenever they felt like it. Neither Director Le Roy nor anyone else knew the difference at the time or in the picture.

Sons of an employe of the Toledo, Peoria and Western Railroad, the Mauchs were born in 1924. Billy is the older by ten minutes. Their mother, delighted with her product, had them taught to dance before they went to school. By the time they were seven, the little Mauchs were acting on radio and posing for ads in their spare time. Their jobs were comparatively easy because whenever one felt unlike working the other took his place. By the time they got their Warner contract in 1935, the Mauchs had had experience on programs like Lucky Strike, Show Boat and The March of Time. After Anthony Adverse, Bobby Mauch was cast in Penrod and Sam. Again he and Billy took turns acting and standing-in. When Warners drew up a new contract, Mrs. Mauch refused to let one son perform as stand-in for the other on the ground that it might give him an inferiority complex. When studio executives demurred, Mrs. Mauch threatened to let Warners keep one twin, sign the other with a rival studio. The Mauchs currently have a contract calling for $350 a week apiece, with equal attention and billing guaranteed. Mrs. Mauch gets $150 as their guardian. Until last week, Father Felix Mauch, currently a general agent for the Toledo, Peoria and Western, lived and worked in New York, dashing out West to see his sons on his vacations. Between pictures his sons visited him in the East. Last week, Mr. Mauch, with Bobby and Billy, returned to California for good, where he has now been transferred. The Mauchs travel by train, because they consider that planes are injurious to their father's business.

On the screen the Mauchs' main defects are their Midwest accents. Their major assets are energy, lack of precocity and a wholesome distaste for showing off, which prevents them from trying to steal scenes like most of their contemporaries. Off screen, the Mauchs' most apparent assets are good brains. Both are currently well ahead of the average in their lessons. Most serious off-screen defect in the Mauchs is their enthusiasm for capitalizing their similarity of appearance to fool acquaintances. When not practicing this hobby, the Mauchs are easily distinguishable. Billy wears glasses. Contrary to legend, Mrs. Mauch can always tell her sons apart when they are awake. She sometimes makes a mistake when both are asleep. To avoid waking the wrong twin the morning when only one has to go to work early, the Mauch family has worked out a system. The Mauch who has worked late the night before leaves make-up on his arm. Only the clean twin is disturbed next day.

Edward VIII as Hamlet of the House of Windsor

A Frank Biography By Hector Bolitho In Which Advocacy And Devil's Advocacy Are Intermingled

KING EDWARD VIII. AN INTIMATE BIOGRAPHY. By Hector Bolitho. 328 pp. Illustrated. New York: J. B. Lippincott Company $3.

By P. W. WILSON

N. Y. Times

Mr. Bolitho is a New Zealander who trailed Edward during his tours, was admitted to the archives of Windsor Castle and thus wrote a frank and informative life of the Prince Consort. He was encouraged to prepare a biography of Edward to be published before the coronation, and is thus under obligations to the former King.

Edward abdicated and the question was what Mr. Bolitho was to do with his manuscript. The answer is a volume in which advocacy and devil's advocacy are intermingled. It is frankly written, but it avoids the sensational. Full justice is done to Edward's charming boyhood, his active service during the war, his world-wide travels and his public activities within Britain herself. But the narrative is accompanied by a Greek chorus of criticism that, with skilful crescendo, culminates in a climax of anathema, ecclesiastical, political and official.

A general verdict on the former King—accepted in these pages—is that as a monarch he failed; some would add that he quit. Mr. Bolitho adds a further and more serious allegation. Edward, we are told, succumbed to "slow disintegration of character—disintegration which was hastened by the perpetual frustration which he suffered."

The sentence passed on Edward by authority is oblivion. People are requested to forget him. This volume is proof that the forgotten man will ever be remembered. Out of the eclipse of exile, Edward emerges as the Hamlet of the House of Windsor.

There was born a boy, whose photograph leaves no doubt as to his temperament. He was shy, sensitive, profoundly conscientious and so indignant against cruelty to others that he denounced the practice of cutting off the tails of puppies. If a guest was dull, it was Edward who told his brothers not to frown but to smile.

In the House of Windsor it is a tradition that a reigning sovereign is antipathetic to any male heir to his throne. So was it in the eighteenth century with the first three Georges. So was it in the nineteenth century with Victoria. So was it—as Mr. Bolitho makes clear—in the twentieth century. Edward VII antagonized George V, and George V antagonized Edward VIII. "Estrangement between father and son," writes Mr. Bolitho, "seems to be inevitable."

The world bade farewell to George, mellowed by a long reign. Mr. Bolitho recalls what George was when Edward as a boy had to face him. In these pages he is described as a second Prince Consort who "believed in the thoroughness of tutors and the cautionary air of school-rooms."

His religion was simple and sincere. But it was expressed in terms of naval discipline. The home was run as a battleship; every day like every other day, with punctuality regarded as a cardinal virtue.

Edward had thus to choose between a father who was Prince of Wales and a grandfather who was King-Emperor. The choice of a child is determined by one factor. He surrenders to kindness wherever kindness is shown to him. It was to kindness that Edward surrendered. There is a revealing glimpse of the rapture with which the Prince, breaking all bounds, flung himself into the arms of the man who understood him. The elder Edward adored his grandson, but with a misgiving. "There,' said he grimly to the Kaiser, "is the last King of England."

The world into which Edward was plunged is bigger than a battleship. It is a world where naval regulations as a safeguard to conduct, as Mr. Bolitho indicates, defeat their own object. For the younger Edward, as for the elder Edward, home ought to have been an escape from society. In both cases, society was an escape from the home.

George ascended the throne. He hated pageantry and heaved a sigh of relief when the coronation was over. According to Mr. Bolitho, the King in his comfortable civilian clothes, was quite happy signing documents in his study and arranging his collection of postage stamps in the evening. He reigned without risks, but as a recluse.

Successive governments were thus convinced that some one must make the running for the House of Windsor. For this task the Prince of Wales was drafted and, during fifteen years of war and revolution, he rendered services which may be appreciated by reading these pages. He fulfilled many of his father's duties and built up some, at any rate, of his father's later popularity.

At Carnarvon Castle the boy of 16 achieved a ceremonial of investiture second only to the coronation itself, and it was soon evident that his tact amounted to genius. At Oxford the Prince dropped into a friend's rooms and found that they were entertaining a "rampant tearing Socialist from the Midlands" who was wearing "a red tie." The Prince picked up a glass of beer from the table and said, "Here's luck, everybody," afterward playing a tune on the banjo.

In 1914 old men failed to keep the peace of Europe and young men paid the penalty. Edward realized that the House of Windsor would be in an impossible position if, alone of families, it was exempt from the supreme sacrifice. Alone and unaided, he forced his way into the trenches and—a more terrible experience—he visited the hospitals. We have this:

One day he went to a hospital, where he was allowed to see only the more happy and presentable patients. He knew there were others, and he asked to see them. These were men in another ward who had been deformed by their wounds. He spoke to them, and when he came to the end of the ward he was asked not to go into the next room, where there was a man mis-shapen beyond recognition. The Prince insisted. He went into the room and found a man, horribly torn, lying upon the bed. He leaned over the bed and touched the soldier's cheek with his lips.

When the war was over, the Prince—we are told—was among the few who did not turn away from its "ugliness." He cared for the wounded, and it was his initiative that contributed to the success of the Toc H—a fellowship of simple social service. That appealed to the Prince's own generation. Everywhere he went he lit the sacred lamp.

Over the Prince there arose a difference of opinion. Queen Mary wanted him to remain at home and adjust himself to England. The government could not spare him. Two of the King's first cousins—the Czar and the Kaiser—had lost their thrones. It was no time for depending on etiquette, which, in many

Armament Race And What Next? Call To Sanity

Proposal To Spend Part Of Huge Arms Budget For Peace Fund

By WICKHAM STEED

Former Editor, The London Times

"This is quite an insane world"—Rudyard Kipling wrote me on Dec. 30, 1935. His seventieth birthday—"or is it because I am 70 that I am persuaded of the essential insanity of it? All the same, I would I were 50, with a chance to see how it will all turn out."

In my answer I said:

You are quite right. The world, or much of it, is insane, and it will not regain sanity until the leading nations have brought their thinking abreast of their technical and mechanical advance. There may still be a breathing space of a few years. I do not yet feel catastrophe to be as certain or as imminent as I felt it in 1912 or 1913. But I am quite sure that unless the futile attempts merely to stop war, and the silly belief that non-war and peace are synonymous, are soon given up and men are taught to conceive peace as a high, risky and therefore attractive adventure, our so-called civilization will perish of maladjustment. . . .

There is still a chance that sanity may win.

Today the chance that sanity may win seems brighter. British rearmament is one of the things that has—temporarily—helped to restore balance to what was a very unstable equilibrium.

Call for Balance

"A call to sanity" is an appeal for better balance in an unbalanced world.

But just as sanity itself is not an absolute or unconditional mental state, so balance is liable to be upset by changing stresses. And there are at least two sorts of balance, the static and the dynamic—the stability of a bicycle propped up against a wall and the stability of the same bicycle well ridden.

What kind of balance do we desire when we lament the lack of stability in the affairs of nations? We mean, I think, some fixed safeguard against violent upset, so that our untroubled minds may reason out what had best be done. The desire for this sort of balance is, I fear, Utopian. It takes too little account of men's love—which may amount to a vital need—of activity, of adventurous risk.

The arms race is a form of adventure.

Chiticism of this adventure runs on two main lines. It is sheer folly, say the economically minded, thus to waste the wealth of nations on unproductive expenditure. The arms race can only lead to war, say its opponents, and war settles nothing. This is not the view of Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini. Still less is it the view of Gen. Erich Ludendorff, whose book, "Total War," teaches that, since war is the highest and fullest phase of a nation's being, every material and spiritual resource should be pledged to preparation for and the actual waging of it.

A New Angle on War

Nor should it be forgotten that the thought of war as a reprensible form of activity is comparatively modern. Thinkers and seers have long protested against the war-method of dealing with international claims and disputes, but in practice governments and peoples have been deaf to these protests. Up to 1914 war was generally looked upon as a lawful undertaking, and armaments in readiness for it were held to be the acme of sound reason. For generations statesmen worshipped the "balance of power." Only during and after the World War did some of them come to feel that what was wanted was not "balanced" power but unbalanced power against countries or governments which should think of making war.

So they founded the League of Nations of whose Covenant President Wilson said on Feb. 14, 1919, when he presented it to the Paris Peace Conference: "Armed force is in the background of this program, but it is in the background, and if the moral force of the world will not suffice, the physical force of the world shall." His statement, which events have since belied, contained no suggestion of an "arms race." Its underlying idea was unbalanced, overwhelming force against war-makers and law-breakers.

At the time this idea was widely welcomed. Few paused to consider how revolutionary it was. It proposed to deny legal status to war-making in the same way as legal status is denied to piracy. Few, if any, of the nations were then really ready for so revolutionary a proposal. Few are ready today.

Words and Phrases?

This may be why phrases like "collective security" have lost favor. They come to be looked on as shibboleths or incantations. "The renunciation of war," "the reign of law" "an international police force," and "an overwhelming peace front" have had no better luck than "collective security." The solid present fact of the arms race overshadows them all. Why?

The answer, I think, is threefold. The men and nations who will the end of suppressing war but shy at the means are not yet convinced that they themselves are in immediate danger. Even when they apprehend danger to themselves, they do not yet feel that they are full and responsible members of an international community whose safety from violent attack is their individual concern.

And a third and deeper ground for their hesitation is uncertainty about what they are actually asked to do. They are asked to preserve and to uphold "peace," and for this purpost to sacrifice national sovereignty and to run what may be great risks. So, almost unconsciously, they wonder what this "peace" may be; and nobody has yet gone far beyond the point of telling them that it is "freedom from war."

Here lies the snag. The suppression of war will not be peace. It will be non-war. What is wanted is a convincing demonstration that peace

ITALY PLANS FOR ETHIOPIA

Former Soldiers Who Know Agriculture Are Being Encouraged To Settle There, While Rome Itself Is Sponsoring The Development Of Local Mineral Resources And Of An Export Trade

By LUIGI VILLARI

Ethiopia, a country endowed with considerable natural resources, had always remained in a backward condition which made any form of economic development impossible. Today the Italians are masters of the country and will be able to exploit its agricultural and mineral wealth.

The area of Ethiopia is six or seven times that of Italy, while its population is only 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 (no census has ever been taken, and this figure is merely approximate), as compared with the 42,000,000 concentrated on the limited area of Italy.

Although not all the territory of Ethiopia is suitable for white settlement, which is to be the main feature of Italy's economic policy, there is undoubtedly room for a far larger population than the present one. A characteristic feature of the country is the fact that it comprises every variety of climate and soil, from the intensely hot, cool, exhilarating mountain climate, from 6,000 to 10,000 feet above the sea, from the sandy, waterless wastes of Somaliland to the rich, well-watered lands of the central plateau. There is consequently the possibility of growing the most varied crops.

Development implies several problems. The first is the establishment of security. This has been to a large extent accomplished. The few small bands of freebooters which still survive will soon be eliminated. The next question is that of communications. Before the Italian occupation, there was no modern means of transit throughout Ethiopia except the narrow-gauge Addis Ababa-Jibuti railroad. There is at present no intention of building new railroads, except perhaps a few branch lines, while the narrow-gauge line will be improved. Motor roads will be the dominant feature of Ethiopian communications.

Although the most important aspect of Italy's new colonial policy is to provide an outlet for her own population, there is no intention of sending large masses of unorganized workers to fend for themselves without guidance or advice. The corporate system, on which the whole economic life of Italy is based, will be extended to Ethiopia and will avert the drawbacks which have attended colonization in many countries in the past. Immigration to Australia began with a rush, yet that continent is today the most underpopulated in the world. The corporate system by no means implies the exclusion of private enterprise; in fact, the seventh clause of the Italian Labor Charter insists on the importance of private enterprise as "the most efficient instrument in the interests of production." But private enterprise unalloyed is attended by dangers not emanating from state interference, such as private monopolies, cartels and corners. Against these the corporate system is a safeguard.

The agricultural possibilities of Ethiopia are not yet fully known, but there are large areas already bearing cereal crops—wheat, barley, corn, besides the local specialties, such as dura and others—while leguminous and oleaginous plants and fruit trees of many kinds flourish. With the adoption of scientific methods these crops can be greatly increased. There is abundance of coffee in the southwestern area; in the northwest, cotton is grown in large quantities, and elsewhere linseed oil and the sugar cane are to be found.

A first experiment in agricultural settlement is being carried out in the country round Addis Ababa. The climate there is excellent, the soil fertile and suited for growing wheat and truck garden produce. There is abundant water from the springs and the affluents of the Awash river, and the proximity of the capital, already a city of 100,000 inhabitants, will supply a good market. The settlers selected are ex-service men about to be demobilized. This experiment should serve as a working model for further development on a larger scale, and in all cases preference will be given to ex-service men and other workers who have helped to build up the first phase of the new civilization of the country, provided, of course, that they are practical farmers.

The main objects of Italy's agricultural policy are (a) to settle as many Italians as possible on the land, (b) to provide food for the local population, Italian and native, (c) to supply Italy with minerals and such agricultural produces as she cannot grow on her own soil, or only grows in insufficient quantities, and (d) to produce such commodities as can be profitably exported so that Ethiopia may become a center of Italian trade. The idea is to make the colony as far as possible self-supporting, so as to avert the risks of eventual isolation inherent to its geographical position and in view of possible international complications.

For the purpose of agricultural development there will be no need to oust the natives from their own holdings. Where the ownership of the land is well defined, as in the Tigre, there will be no attempt at white settlement. In fact, by the abolition not only on slavery, but also of the feudal system, whereby a few great chiefs were able to exploit the masses, the natives will be better off and have greater security of tenure than they had before. But elsewhere there is plenty of room both for the natives and the Italians.

Another important aspect of Ethiopian development is mineral wealth. At present, even less is known about it than about agricultural possibilities, as under the old régime it was extremely difficult to obtain the right even to prospect for minerals. There were, before the war, a few gold mines in operation in Eritrea and in Ethiopia itself. Platinum had been found in the latter, but exploitation was only on a limited scale and conducted by the most primitive methods. Now commissions of scientific investigators have been sent out to ascertain the mineral resources, and several companies have been formed to develop them. As in the case of agriculture, there is no intention of throwing open the country to prospectors and other adventurers.

Special authority has to be secured before any enterprise is allowed to operate in Italian East Africa.

A number of companies have been constituted for the purpose of dealing with different aspects of economic development. The Ethiopian Cotton Company, backed by most of the Italian cotton spinners, is studying local conditions for the cultivation of cotton, for the improvements in its methods of cultivation, and the introduction of new varieties. Cotton is already exported from Eritrea and Italian Somaliland, and it is hoped in time that Ethiopia will supply the bulk of Italy's needs. Another company is conducting similar operations in connection with textile fibers, other than cotton, while a third will collect and export to Italy vegetable oils.

The development of sheep farming, the improvement of the native breeds of cattle and the elimination of cattle plague, in order to render possible the export of meat, the trade in raw hides and the lumber business, are being handled by different companies. In the field of mining the CO. MI. NA. (Compagnia etiopica mineraria), operating in conjunction with the Montecatini company, Italy's premier mining and fertilizer concern, is prospecting for minerals in various districts. An electric company is setting up power plants in the chief towns; these use the local lignite for fuel at present, but in the near future hydroelectric plants will be built, as there is plenty of water power. The pre-existing Prasso Company, operating the platinum mines of southwest Ethiopia, is being reconstructed and provided with up-to-date machinery. Finally, there is the A.M.A.O. (Azienda mineraria Africa Orientale), a semi-government organization, which is conducting mineral researches both in Eritrea and in Ethiopia proper.

It has been debated whether foreign capital is to be allowed to participate in the development of Ethiopia. As a general rule, Italian capital will be preferred, but the foreign investor will not be excluded. American and German capital will be more welcome than that of some other countries, but each application will be dealt with on its individual merits.

One serious obstacle to the trade of Ethiopia is presented by the geographical situation of the colony and by the high dues imposed by the Suez Canal Company. High-priced goods can, of course, afford to pay the dues, but the export to Italy of cotton, coffee, wheat, meat, wool, hides, etc., will be handicapped by them, even though these have been recently somewhat reduced. The difficulty may be partly overcome by setting up local plants for carrying out the initial industrial processes, thereby increasing the value without increasing the weight of commodities to be exported.

On the other hand, there are considerable possibilities for the export of Ethiopian produce to countries south of Suez. Other parts of Africa, the Middle and the Far West, and even Australia, may provide valuable markets unaffected by the Canal dues. In any case, the whole question of the Suez Canal will have to be gone into at any early date, as a reform of the statutes by which it is regulated has been long overdue, and the undertaking must be invested with the character of a public utility company rather than that of a mere business proposition to be regulated in the interest of the investors alone.

In order to keep in touch with the economic forces of the country, the Minister of the Colonies has instituted a number of consulte, or advisory bodies, composed of the representatives of Italian agriculture, industry, trade, communications and labor, as well as of the various Government departments concerned; they will be consulted before any measure affecting a particular field of economic activity is taken.

The type of colony which Italy aims at creating on the high tableland of East Africa will differ from that existing in many other parts of the world. It is not to be either a purely exploitation colony, employing native labor alone under white capital and management in order to secure supplies of raw materials for the exclusive benefit of the mother country, nor a dominion such as Canada or Australia, almost wholly inhabited by white settlers and practically independent of the mother country. It will contain a variety of forms of economic development, according to the nature of the different parts of the country. But, as I said before, it is to be an outlet for Italy's surplus population, leading an autonomous, but not independent, life of its own, developing in close cooperation with the mother country, supplying it with raw materials, but also exporting to other countries. The natives are to be left on their own holdings, but enabled to improve their agricultural methods and secure higher returns for their activities.

THE ADOWA ROAD—Expert road builders, Italians have made this highway passable at all points, and excellent at many. It is the purpose of the administration to construct roads wherever they are needed to help in the rehabilitation of Ethiopia.

TRANSPORTATION IS A FIRST ESSENTIAL—To get into the country, and blaze the way for further development, roads, bridges, and railroads are necessary. A breakwater at Mogadiscio in Italian Somaliland is part of a harbor improvement intended to facilitate bringing in material for use in Ethiopia.

Social and Personal Notes

GENERAL MEETING OF THE FRANCO-JAPANESE SOCIETY

The general meeting of the Franco-Japanese Society was held at the residence of H.I.H. Prince Kan-in, Hirakawa-cho, Kojimachi, at 2:30 p.m. Saturday under the presidency of Viscount Sukekuni Soga, director of the administration council of the society. Some 130 members of the society were present including Mr. Arsene Henry, French Ambassador to Japan; Mr. Frederic Knobel, Counsellor to the French Embassy; Commander Max Bruyere; Dr. Tomiiro Araki, privy councillor; Baron Keishiro Matsui, former Japanese Ambassador to France; Mr. Marcel Doret, Mr. Francois Micheletti, Viscount Naokazu Nabeshima, Dr. Léon Mazeaud, Mr. Henri Gil-Marchex, and many others.

After the meeting, they were received in audience by H.I.H. Prince Kan-in and a tea was given to all who attended in the garden of the residence.

SUCCESSFUL RECITAL

The first farewell recital of the Elastro String Trio was held at the Gunjinkai Hall, Kudan, at 7:30 p.m. last Sunday under the management of Mr. A. Stork. Mr. Mirowitch, pianist of the trio could not appear on the program owing to a slight accident at the recital and Professor Leo Strota assisted at the piano.

The program consisted of three sonatas by Mozart, Brahms and Schubert. Their interpretation of the music was striking. The second recital will be held this evening at the same hall at 7:30 p.m. Mr. Mirowitch will be able to appear today. The third recital and the fourth recital will be held at the Hibiya Public Hall at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, June 8 and Sunday, June 13 respectively.

FRENCH FLIERS LEAVE TOKYO FOR KOBE

Mr. Marcel Doret and Mr. Francois Micheletti, French fliers who have been staying in Tokyo for some time left Tokyo Station at 9 a.m. Sunday for Kobe. They will take a French liner at Kobe for Marseilles today.

TO HOLD EXHIBITION

Under the auspices of the Mizuye, a monthly art magazine, an exhibition of surrealist paintings will be held at the Nippon Salon Art Galleries, Nishi Ginza, from June 9 to 14.

STATUE UNVEILED

The statue of the late Baron Koi Furuichi, former director of the Engineering Department of the Tokyo Imperial University and former privy councillor, was unveiled in the compound of the university, Hongo, at 2 p.m. Saturday under the presidency of Dr. Mataro Nagayo, President of the university.

Many prominent persons and professors of the university attended the ceremony. The statue was made by Mr. Shinji Hori, the well-known sculptor.

TO GIVE A LECTURE

Mr. Noel Nouet, professor at the Tokyo School of Foreign Languages will give a lecture at the Maison Franco-Japonaise de Tokio at 5 p.m. Tuesday under the title of the "History of Paris." The lecture will be open free to the public.

TO BE IN TOKYO

Mr. W. M. Vories will be at the Tokyo office of his company from June 9 to 12.

GARDEN PARTY TO BE HELD

Invitations have been issued for a garden party which will be held for foreign Students in Tokyo from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday, June 12 at the home of Mr. Kaichiro Nezu, Minami-cho, 6 chome, Aoyama.

It is expected that Prince Iyesato Tokugawa and many other prominent personages will be present to meet the young people from many different nations.

The garden party is to be held under the auspices of the Pan Pacific Good Relations Club, the Women's Peace Society, the Women's Overseas Association; the Foreign Students' Friendship Society, the International Students Association, the League of Nations—Tokyo Office, the International Labor Office—Tokyo Office, the Japan English Students Association, the Tokyo Women's Federation, the Tokyo Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. and the Oriental Women's Association in cooperation with the Society for International Cultural Relations, the Tokyo Rotary Club, the America Japan Society and the Japan International Association.

In case of rain the garden party will be cancelled.

NIPPON CULTURAL FEDERATION

The weekly meetings of the Nippon Cultural Federation which will be held this week at the Federation Forum in the New Osaka Buildings, Uchisaiwai-cho, Kojimachi, are as follows:

Tuesday, 12 a.m., Class in flower arrangement; 5 to 6 p.m., Serial Lecture on the Japanese Sword. Mr. Sojiro Sutoh will speak on Swordguards.

Thursday, 5 to 7 p.m., Meeting for Occidentals. Mrs. Fumiko Hirata will speak on the Making of Japanese Womanhood.

Friday, 5 to 7 p.m., Meeting for Orientals. Mr. Zenza Kawakami will speak on Soil Culture of Japan.

All interested are welcome to the meetings.

ENTERTAINED AT LUNCHEON

The Latvian aviator, Captain Herbert Cukurs, who arrived at Haneda Wednesday was entertained at a luncheon at the Foreign Office at noon today. At 2 p.m. he left Tokyo for Nikko and will return Tuesday.

Sunday he spent sightseeing around Tokyo and in the evening he attended a performance of the Kabuki.

Weather permitting he will leave Haneda on return flight to Latvia Wednesday.

ARRIVES IN TOKYO

Mrs. Jay W. Myers of Bombay arrived in Tokyo Saturday for a short visit.

UNDELIVERED TELEGRAMS

The following undelivered telegrams are lying at the Kobe Central Telegraph Office:

Cosagaten, Kobe, from Manila; Brina, Kobe, from Soerabaja; Zia, Kobe, from Aden; Nate from Amritsar; Yoko Abiko from Umeda; Sherwin from Yokohama; Nakabaco from Rangoon; Iyoyamori from Singapore; Juridico from Shimonoseki; Fareastern from Karikal; Tillett from Taiyudo; Richard Rodriquez, Kobe, from Tokyoyubin; Satoshuneo, Kobe, from St. Louis M.O., Levyalvares from Paris; Cowasji Battlivala from Bombay; Await Ridley from Tientsin; Iwadrung from Newyork and Sitamura from Bombay.

U.S. Launches 3d Ship Named For Savannah

Herald Tribune

CAMDEN, N. J., May 8.—The 10,000-ton cruiser Savannah, third United States naval vessel to be named for the Georgia city, was launched in the Delaware River at the New York Shipbuilding Company's yard here at 11:32 a.m. today. Miss Jane Mayo Bowden, of Savannah, niece of a Georgia Representative, a Georgia Senator and a Georgia Supreme Court justice, broke a bottle of sixty-four-year-old champagne over the Savannah's bow.

Four thousand persons, including Navy officials, members of Congress and municipal officials, watched the launching. Several spectators were struck by flying glass when the champagne bottle was broken and Miss Bowden's right arm was cut slightly.

The Savannah's keel was laid on May 31, 1934, and she will be commissioned next year after being fitted and given trial runs. She has a water-line length of 600 feet, a 62-foot beam and a mean draft of 19½ feet.

Admiral William G. Du Bose, assistant chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, represented the Navy Department at the ceremony. Governor Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey was represented by his naval aide, Lieutenant Commander George C. Warren. Mayor George Brunner of Camden escorted Mayor Robert M. Hitch of Savannah and his party to the shipyard. Governor E. D. Rivers of Georgia was represented by A. A. Smith, and among prominent natives of Georgia there were Representative Hugh Peterson, Senator Richard B. Russell jr. and Chief Justice Richard B. Russell, all uncles of Miss Bowden.

Mrs. Caroline O'Day, Representative-at-Large from New York and a native of Savannah; Representative Norman R. Hamilton, of Virginia; Edgar D. Hilleary, president of the Read Company, and R. C. Morse, vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, were other guests.

The first Savannah was a forty-four-gun frigate of 1,726 tons, built in 1843. She was at one time flagship of the home squadron and saw much service in the Civil War, being in action several times off the coast of Georgia. She was later used as an instruction ship at Annapolis and then as a training ship for the midshipmen's cruises to Europe. She was sold in 1883. The second Savannah was formerly the German ship Sayonia, seized when the United States entered the World War. She was commissioned in November, 1917, and became a submarine tender. After the war she continued in duty on both Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, to be placed out of commission at Bremerton, Wash., in December, 1926.

ber of Commerce, sent an exhibit, is also arousing international interest throughout Japan".

Mrs. Gauntlett expects to succeed in her work for peace since she is following Whittier's admonition to attach one's self to the most unpopular cause in order to succeed.

Delegates to the 4th Pan-Pacific Women's Conference to be held in Vancouver, British Columbia, July 12 to 24, will be royally entertained, according to word just received from Miss Mary L. Bollert, Dean of Women, University of British Columbia, who is chairman of conference preparations. Miss Bollert's letter reads as follows:

"If it falls in with the plans of the Program Committee, we shall have on the opening night—July 12, Monday—a garden affair and buffet supper at the home of Senator McRae of the Dominion Senate, Ottawa, which will be the Canadian welcome and a "get acquainted" opportunity.

"On Friday, July 16, a dinner will be given by the Provincial Government with the Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Eric Hamber present, and on Sunday a folk festival in which 40 nations will participate, the all-nation welcome to the Conference. The Lieutenant Governor and as many other persons as we wish will open their gardens for tea. If only the weather god is propitious!

"The Women's Canadian Club will give a luncheon, the Board of Trade a luncheon, the Institute of Pacific Relations, something, as we wish. Final plans will not be arranged until Dr. Georgina Sweet of Australia arrives and perhaps Miss Mary L. Cady (San Francisco), program chairman, and Mrs. Tsune Gauntlett (Tokyo), the international president.

"We have a good Canadian leader for each of the six topics of the program and hope there will be a large number from the United States and other of the 14 member countries. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Miss Frances Perkins, Miss Lena Madeson Phillips, Dame Rachel Crowdy and Miss Marjery Fry, both of London, and Dr. Leyton Richards of Birmingham, England, are among the headliner speakers invited."

Aircraft Orders Will Keep Plants In U.S. Busy

NEW YORK—American aircraft manufacturers who worried the last few years about getting orders for their products have new worries today—how to fill the orders they have on hand.

An unprecedented wave of buying by domestic airlines, renewed interest of private individuals in purchasing and flying their own craft, and the European armament race have all contributed to the condition which for the first time in years has brought a flush of health to this country's aeronautical industry.

All Factories Busy

From the larger plants producing commercial airliners or giant war craft come reports of advance orders sufficient to keep all workmen busy for months. And smaller shops—those that turn out no more than two or three tiny planes a week—are also busy as the buying bug hits less wealthy but more plentiful private pilots.

The reason, representatives of the industry explain, is twofold: The asserted leadership of the United States in the design and production of commercial planes for private or transport uses and the inability of foreign buyers to obtain equipment from European factories whose outputs are devoted entirely to building fleets of war birds.

The Douglas Aircraft Company now has commercial orders totaling $11,000,000 on its books—in addition to joint orders of the major American airlines for specimens of a super-transport with four motors which is yet far from the flying stage.

The Lockheed company is $3,000,000 behind on its airline orders. On the East Coast the Grumman Aircraft Engineering Company and Sikorsky Aircraft on Long Island had unfilled military contracts of $845,946 and $396,500 respectively on Jan. 1.

More Super-Clippers

The Martin company at Baltimore—which recently announced a new super-clipper plane even larger than those flying the Pacific—is pushed to complete a huge order for army bombers, while in Seattle Boeing Aircraft Company still has several super-bombers under contract for the army before turning its entire attention to a new type high-altitude transport plane for Transcontinental & Western Air.

Unfilled army contracts for airplanes as of January 1, 1937, were placed by Aviation Magazine at $29,411,951, with unfilled military engine orders divided between Pratt and Whitney Company and the Wright Aeronautical Corporation at $9,095,396.

The business of manufacturing transport planes—in which American builders have invaded the Holland, Polish, German, French, Swiss, Swedish, and even the English markets, seems to be sort of an endless chain affair, aviation experts explained.

"Operators are constantly calling for faster, bigger, safer, more economic equipment," they said. "As long as the manufacturers can supply the desired planes and engines they are assured of more orders than they can fill."

How To Attain Speed

ment of the Normandie 67,500 tons, and displacement means actual weight.

So, being heavier, and having more hull to push through the water, the Queen Mary needs more power to attain the same speed. And when built she had more power, by about 25 per cent, her rated horsepower being 185,000, compared with an original rating of 160,000 in the Normandie. However, during last Winter's overhaul, in preparation for her successful assault in March on the "Blue Ribbon" record, sixteen extra steam nozzles were installed on the French liner. Marine engineers say the Normandie has developed 179,000 horsepower, and that the Queen Mary's log shows she has used a maximum of about 189,000 horse-power.

Easy to Change Propellers

Effective power in a ship has to be finally measured by how much the propellers push against the water, and while hull design cannot be changed at all and engine redesigning is a difficult job, propellers can be changed with comparative ease.

Propellers are what make ships vibrate, too, and a slight change in pitch or size or distance from the hull may not only add a knot or two to speed, but may also reduce the "shake" or quiet the currents set up by the blades against afterbody and rudder.

The Queen Mary had four new propellers to replace her original set immediately after her trial runs. She had a new pair put on last winter, and will have the second matching pair installed when she is next hauled out.

The Normandie had four new propellers put on this spring, changing then from three-blade to four-blade "wheels," like those on the British ship. She tried having them turn opposite ways in pairs, but gave that up. Her change reduced vibration and added speed.

Lippmann Bids

contributed to this temper at one time or another, and when I think of the last Republican campaign in its final stages of angry decay I can understand why, humanly speaking, the temper of Washington is what it is.

Calls for Forgiveness

"Nevertheless, I could wish that our most powerful alumnus could persuade himself to believe that it is not wise to make an official creed out of suspicion, distrust and irreconcilability. He exercises more power than any individual has ever exercised on this continent and the greatest of all his powers is the power of the example he sets to the people. I wish he could find it in his heart to forgive his enemies and to show some cordiality to those who, though they may differ with him on this or that, respect his office and wish him well. I do not think that the spirit of class warfare should receive even faint encouragement from the seat of government, for once unleashed that spirit will go far beyond the passing conveniences of partisan politics.

"In that spirit we can solve no problems. In that spirit we can only be overwhelmed by all our problems. This thing will get away from us unless those who have power, be it great or little, can remember how truly Burke spoke when he said that magnanimity in politics is not seldom the truest wisdom, and a great empire and little minds go ill together."

Italy To Supply All Own 'Gas' By 1938, Duce Says

By JOHN T. WHITAKER

N. Y. Herald Tribune

ROME, May 15—Praising Italy's progress toward economic self-sufficiency, to which the League of Nations sanctions last year gave impetus, Premier Benito Mussolini today told a cheering National Assembly of Fascist Corporations, gathered in the Julius Caesar Hall on the Capitoline Hill, that by the second half of 1938 this country would produce enough gasoline to meet all its needs.

Any hopes which the democracies may have held that Italy would abandon her program of autarchy (economic self-sufficiency) are vain, Il Duce announced, adding:

"For it would only throw Italy on the mercy of those countries able to wage war without reference to time or consumption. He who has run the risk of being strangled by the rope of economic war knows what to think and how to act."

Ethiopia To Be Source

After this further reference to sanctions—alway a good subject with which to stir Italians—Mussolini hastened to state that he intended the economic campaign as a guaranty of peace, and as a hindrance to aggression by richer nations. Italy's new empire in East Africa, he said, would play a decisive part in achieving autarchy, with what was expected from that region in the way of cotton, coffee, meat hides, wool, timber, minerals and precious metals.

The Fascist dictator prophesied that Italy would reach a new high in the production of iron, with 1,100,000 tons this year, as against 951,000 tons in 1935 and 900,000 tons in 1936. Announcing that with 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 tons of coal being imported annually Italy this year would produce 1,000,000 tons and soon would be able to reach a total of 4,000,000 tons, he added that there would always be "one or many nations ready to furnish our remaining needs." Synthetic rubber and transparent wrapping paper were also mentioned as important fields in which this country soon would be producing all her own needs.

Turning to agriculture and key industries, he said that although the Fascist state had taken over many phases of economic life it did not intend to monopolize them, as the Soviet Union had done.

Calls For Courage

Mussolini did not hold out a picture of a colonial empire teeming with riches to be exploited with ease, but he called again on the Italian people to face courageously the difficulties of exploitation, which he said could be achieved only through work and faith.

As an incentive, he pointed with pride that he had "documented proof" that the empire would afford all its promised wealth. What he did not add in this encouraging report on the potentialities of Ethiopia was that development of the empire's resources would require and depend on a long period of peace.

Deutschland Victim Dies

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

BERLIN, June 4.—The death of another sailor injured in the bombing of the German pocket battleship Deutschland last Saturday by loyalist planes today brought the number of those who have succumbed to the bombing to 28, it was announced here today. The latest victim died at the Ibiza Hospital at Ibiza, Balearic Islands, today.

English Director Engaged By Columbia

John Brahm, who has directed a number of successful English pictures, including the 1936 version of "Broken Blossoms," has been engaged by Columbia to bring to the screen "The Man Behind The Law," the company's new picture in which Otto Kruger will play the lead, with Douglass Montgomery also seen in a featured role.

Mr. Brahm makes his debut as an American director with this production. Among the many other English pictures, which he directed were "Scroggs," "The Last Journey" and "Spy of Napoleon."

Rebuke

The man from Oklahoma had just arrived in Boston.

"Hey, officer," he said to a policeman, "can you tell me where is a good place to stop at?"

"Just before the at!" the officer replied, continuing down the street, swinging his nightstick.—Montreal Herald.

Kabuki Program Is Excellent

Contrary to the usual custom of having six to eight plays in the day's program, the Kabuki June program consists of only three plays. But the three plays are complete while often old plays are cut short to enable the staging of so many plays in one program in a limited time.

The first in the program is Honcho Nijushiko, a hitoric play representing the days of Katsuyori Takeda and Shingen Nagao. Uzayemon plays the parts of Kagekatsu and Katsuyori. Kikugoro plays the role of Yayegaki-hime, who is in love with Katsuyori. Yayegaki-hime becomes possessed of a fox when she prays to the Inari to save the life of Katsuyori. Kikugoro in her part is the main feature of the piece.

The second play is Tsuchigumo, the famous dance play in which Kikugoro plays the spirit of Tsuchigumo (ground spider) and tries to cause the death of Raiko, played by Uzayemon. Tsuchigumo is one of the most favorite parts of Kikugoro, and it is one of the most typical Kabuki dance plays.

The last play is Kyowaseidan Enmei-roku, the story of a Buddhist priest going wrong. Uzayemon plays the part of the priest and his brother. The play is based on an actual incident taking place in the Tokugawa days. Because of many ladies of the high class visiting the Enmei-in temple, the officials became suspicious, and finally succeeded in obtaining proofs of evil practices resorted to by the priest and his associates.

The June program may not be so elaborate as those given in the past months, but the three plays given are excellent. Particularly as those plays are given completely it will be a good chance for those who are not familiar with ancient plays to understand them. Recently it has become a common practice to give only one scene from a long play, and thus it is appreciated only by those who know the entire story.

Three Plays Showing

one of the best actors to be seen today. However, one is inclined to miss the presence of that veteran Miss Ritsuko Mori.

As is usual with plays presented here, the stories are heavy and at times very depressing, fortunately comedy relief is offered by an up and coming young actress, Miss Kakuko Mori.

In a short but delightful comedy, Katei Osoji, the main roles are again taken and capably filled by Miss Mizutani and Mr. Inoue. The story deals with two couples who receive letters that they cherish in secret. The letters to the wives being from the same male and the letters to the husbands being from the same cafe waitress.

A series of highly amusing incidents arise which keeps the audience in laughter.

The final presentation on the bill is Otoko no Tsugunai, a tragedy in five acts. It is really a rather complicated love story centering around a young scholar, portrayed by Toshio Yamaguchi who is loved by two women, portrayed by Miss Mizutani and Miss Yoshiko Okada.

It is the former that the hero must marry because his elder brother gets a sum of money from the girl's father on the understanding that the hero will become his adopted son. But due to circumstances, the hero and his true love Ruriko (Miss Okada) were unable to marry before this agreement was made.

In this play, Miss Kakuko Mori has the opportunity to give comedy relief that is badly needed. She plays the part of a faithful but very ignorant country maid servant. While still comparatively new to the stage, Miss Mori shows qualities that promise her a great future.

Miss Mizutani is at her best in tragic plays and is excellent in her portrayal of Osumi, the daughter of a hot spring inn keeper. In the final scene, her interpretation of the actions of a person gone insane through a series of unfortunate incidents is magnificent.

Bible Continues As World's No.1 Best Selling Book

Literary Digest

All last year America raved over such best-sellers as "Gone With the Wind" and "Live Alone and Like It." Sales soared to the hundreds of thousands.

No such publicity marked the public purchase of the Bible, but, as usual, it held its own as the world's No. 1 best-seller.

During 1936, it was announced by the American Bible Society at its annual meeting recently, 27,000,000 copies of the religious work had been sold throughout the world. Of this number, the Society was responsible for 290,000 Bibles, 398,486 Testaments and 7,078,822 portions of the Scriptures.

These were published in 166 languages and dialects and in an additional twenty-six characters, including the different systems for the blind.

The 7,000,000-odd total was an increase of 542,205 over 1935. Areas of increased distribution included: Mexico—up 10,000—largest number of Bibles sold since beginning of the Society's work there sixty years ago;

Brazil—up 13,000, most since work started there in 1876;

China—more complete Bibles since modern missionary work started there;

Japan—up 1,000,000 Bibles and sections.

The chief reasons given for this gain were stimulation of interest due to the 400th anniversary of the Coverdale Bible, the American National Preaching Mission and the growth of literacy and wide-spread building of modern highways in South America and Asia.

In Argentina a gasoline tax is being used to build fine roads so that remote places soon can be reached with Bible coaches and in Japan, twenty colporteurs traveled approximately 33,426 miles, which represents a circle of about one and one-half times around the world.

These colporteurs are natives who carry on the Society's distributive work. They travel by launch, Bible coach (truck or trailer fitted up as a showroom for Bibles), bicycles, autos and ox-carts. Known since earliest days of mission work as colporteurs, they soon may be called something else if the Society's search for a new name for the workers carrying on its activities succeeds.

The two foremost translations last year were: The New Testament for the first time into Mam dialect—that of a 200,000-strong Indian tribe in Guatemala—and for the first time completely into Samareno, a Filipino dialect. The Guatemalan work was done by the Rev. and Mrs. H. Dudley Peck.

They had been in the field fifteen years and for a decade had been working on this translation.

Also completed was the revision of the Turkish Bible into Roman letters from Arabic script, officially outlawed in Turkey.

Established 121 years ago, the American Bible Society has ten branches in America, twelve foreign agencies. It works in cooperation with the British and Foreign Bible Society and the Bible Society of Scotland.

It sells Bibles at or below cost; in many cases gives them to missionary organizations for free distribution.

Several Protestant denominations, including Methodist, Episcopalian and Presbyterian, contribute in return for help it gives missionaries. The biggest foreign sales usually are in China and Japan. Last year's peak in America was reached in New York and New Jersey. The Society does no work in Europe.

rhythm. Tingling, jingling music weaves along the spines of the hundreds in the scene. Featured singers send choruses winging out and community singers echo them. New clever words for every chorus, with the stage dancers moving in corresponding rhythmic patterns. The "Jamboree" winds up in a fun sprinkled scene where performers are "spreading the jam," the latest in musical entertainment.

The song hits in "Top of the Town" include a number of the same title as the picture," beside "I Feel That Feelish Feeling Coming On," "Blame It on the Rhumba," "Where Are You?" "There Are No Two Ways About It," "Fireman, Save My Child" and "Jamboree."

Rosendahl Is Mystified

nishing of a ground crew of ninety navy personnel and additional personnel as the operators of the ship saw fit after consulting with the commanding officer of this station. On this occasion we had 93 navy personnel and 139 civilians recruited from the vicinity, practically all being men who had had experience handling airships and were quite familiar with their duties.

Advised Pruss on Landing

"Leaving Frankfort with ninety-seven persons aboard, thirty-six passengers and sixty-one crew, the Hindenburg encountered headwinds and retarding winds most of the time, with the result that she was twelve hours late and her landing time was postponed until 6 P. M. She sent a message notifying us of the change and all arrangements were made for landing her at the new hour.

"On Thursday weather conditions were unsettled. The Hindenburg came over the station during the stormy period of the afternoon and proceeded south and east to lay off along the coast awaiting the landing hour. Because the ship was late and it was desired to meet the departure schedule that night, we wanted to accomplish the landing at the earliest possible moment in order to replenish hydrogen, refuel, etc., as much as possible while day-light lasted."

Commander Rosendahl then read radio messages he had exchanged with Captain Pruss of the Hindenburg about plans for landing while the dirigible cruised offshore waiting for the squall line to move away from the landing area.

At 5:43 P. M., Eastern Daylight Time, Commander Rosendahl radioed: "Conditions still unsettled. Recommend delay landing until word from station. Advise your decision."

Almost immediately Captain Pruss replied: "We will wait until you report landing conditions are better."

At 6:12 P. M. Rosendahl again radioed: "Conditions now considered suitable for landing. Ground crew is ready. Thunderstorm over station. Ceiling 2,000 feet. Visibility five miles to westward. Surface temperature 60. Surface winds WNW 8 knots, gusts to 20 knots. Surface pressure 29.68."

Three minutes later the following brief message was sent from the station, bringing the huge ship in on its last flight: "Recommend landing now—Rosendahl."

Recalls Weather Conditions

Commander Rosendahl testified that the storm had moved off when he sent the final message and that the Hindenburg soon reappeared, taking a northerly course from the coast.

"The Hindenburg circled the approximate boundary of the station," Commander Rosendahl continued, "and turned to the right for the approach to the landing in a generally southerly direction.

"At this time the weather conditions were: Ceiling from 2,000 to 3,000 feet; clouds covering seven-tenths of the sky; very light rain falling; barometer 29.72; temperature 60 degrees Fahrenheit; relative humidity 98. The surface winds were light and variable, shifting about continuously, but southeast one knot at the beginning of the landing. The wind was west six knots at the top of the mast, 186 feet above sea level.

"There was occasional lightning in the distance, south and southwest, but local conditions were rapidly improving and in my opinion were entirely satisfactory to landing. As a matter of fact, we have accomplished successful landings of dirigibles many times in much worse weather conditions.

"The ship made rather a sharp turn to starboard, but this was nothing unusual in a hydrogen ship. Ships operated with helium do not reduce buoyancy by valving gas as do hydrogen ships, and consequently do not continuously readjust their equilibrium and static position as do hydrogen ships. The backing power of the engines was used to check the forward way of the ship, but this also was customary.

"The ground crew was in all respects ready to receive the ship. The men had organized in their proper formations under their leaders in their proper positions.

Landing Lines Connected

"On former arrivals the Hindenburg, after valving off gas, had settled down into the hands of the ground crew easily. On this occasion, because the ship had been soaked in the rain and was now in a drier atmosphere, the cover was drying off rapidly.

"At 7:21 o'clock the ship dropped her starboard landing line, followed immediately by the port line. The ground crew seized these lines and connected them with the ends of the ground lines. The purpose of these lines was to steady the ship. The actual pulling of the ship to the mooring mast was done by a steel cable dropped from the nose of the ship and connected with the mast so that the cone of the ship could be slipped into a corresponding cup at the top of the mast.

"When I observed the difference in force and direction between the light surface wind and the strong wind at the approach level, I went from my location to the mast to confer with the mooring officer, Lieut. Commander Jesse L. Kenworthy, to consider shifting the mooring anchorage. This was nothing new, as the ship had had to spiral down on previous landings because of such variation in the winds."

Rosendahl's Story of Blaze

Because he was at the mast, 700 feet from the ship, he went on, he obviously could not give a complete description of the accident. He then told what he had observed:

"I saw a small burst of flame on the after part of the ship on top. My feeling at once was that it spelled doom of the ship. I saw practically the whole stern take fire just after the initial burst on top. Then the fire spread progressively forward.

"I was greatly surprised that there were not more explosions. While I had seen balloons burn, I had never seen an airship burn, and I had felt that there would be more explosions. There were mild explosions during the burning, but in my opinion they were incidental to the primary cause of the disaster, which was the burning of the hydrogen with which the ship was inflated. Obviously I have no knowledge of what was the origin of the fire.

"As the stern burned, the ship assumed a stern-down attitude, having lost buoyancy there, and settled to the ground that way at a moderate rate of speed as the fire spread forward. I ran from the vicinity and shouted to the ground crew to do likewise. Whether they heard me or not I do not know, but the main concern of all was to get clear of the wreckage and not be brought under it.

"Shortly after the airship reached the ground, burning, a large percentage if not all of the ground crew returned to the wreckage, and many noteworthy rescues were effected. There were numerous cases worthy of commendation, and the names of the rescued and rescuers undoubtedly will come out during this investigation. I saw various members of the crew and passengers escape, some unscathed, some badly burned."

Ground Not Touched Before Fire

Commander Rosendahl then told of sending for emergency equipment, including ambulances and fire apparatus; the putting out of the fire by chemical fire extinguishers and hose, although there was delay in getting hose to the place because there were no hydrants in the vicinity; the establishment of a temporary morgue in a hangar and the sending of the burned and injured to various hospitals.

He said the fire burned for three or four hours and that guards were posted around the wreckage, to keep people from taking away "souvenirs" or removing evidence, as soon as it became apparent that no further rescue work could be done.

"The Hindenburg did not touch the ground at any time until the fire brought her down," Commander Rosendahl said. "The ropes had been in contact with the ground for at least four minutes before the fire was detected, and that was its only contact with the ground. Of course the ship had dropped water ballast in its descent, but that was normal procedure, and as a rule the water dissipates in the air."

He said the hydrogen normally was valved out by manual operation of a master valve in the control car, where indicators showed the pressure in all the gas cells at all times. It was possible also, he said, to valve gas at the individual cells.

Mr. Mulligan asked about the helium situation and Commander Rosendahl referred him to the Act of 1923, amended in 1925, as the law on the use and export of this non-inflammable, non-explosive gas, of which the United States has a world monopoly. He said the navy formerly produced its own helium, but that the Bureau of Mines now produced all helium for the government.

Thinks Lines Grounded Static

Commander Rosendahl then was asked about the possibility that static electricity from the landing lines might have set fire to valved hydrogen.

"Our experience in operating airships," he said, "is that even in dry weather an airship hull accumulates static electricity, and that the first contact with the ground by the landing ropes discharges that static on the ship. We have had men in ground crews who suffered severe shocks and were even knocked down by seizing the ropes before they hit the ground, and experienced men will not touch a line until it has hit the ground.

"On this occasion the humidity was quite high and the ship absorbed much moisture. Probably the manila ropes contained moisture which would increase their conductivity."

Although he indicated his belief that the ropes would ground whatever static there was on an airship, he declined to say, when asked by reporters during a recess, that he considered static electricity improbable as the cause of the fire. He said he could not express any opinion as to the cause, and had deliberately refrained from questioning the crew, as he believed their testimony should be reserved for the investigation.

During his testimony he was asked if the gas cells in the Hindenburg were the same as she carried last year. He said he did not know, but that it was improbable that the ship would have needed a new set of cells, as they usually were good for several years.

Another Deficit

Africa) had shown a balance of 20,000,000 lire, but owing to various developments, such as expenditure on armaments, public works, and other items, this estimate had been modified. The "normal" balance for 1936-37 would, therefore, end in a deficit. But this deficit would be, if not totally extinguished, reduced to a negligible sum by "other important entries of an exceptional character, such as the further revenue produced by the realization of the gold and currencies offered to the Fatherland by the Italian people, supplementary to the first quota of 401,000,000 lire comprised in the final Budget figures for 1935-36 and to the sum accruing to the Treasury through the revaluation of the reserves of the bank of issue." Altogether, then, the year 1936-37 would close with a surplus of over 1,000,000,000 lire.

Domestic Sugar

beet's share, and inserting a provision which may wipe out entirely the importation of refined sugar from off-shore regions.

Since his proposal was revealed, it has been under bombardment from high Administration leaders, with the three influential secretaries Hull, Ickes, and Wallace pouring upon it some of their strongest language. Among other things, they charged the bill with being a breach of faith with Cuba, and they declared that such protective devices would increase the annual cost of sugar to the American consumer by $350,000,000.

The Congressional "Bloc"

Representative Cummings' draft cuts the allocations of Cuba more than from any other area. It is dropped from 1,922,734 under the Administration proposal to 1,820,420. But the blow to importation or refined sugar is in some respects even more severe, and hits not only Cuba but the other off-shore areas.

Thus American refiners and producers are in close alliance, working with their legislative bloc, and since no signs of compromise are in evidence, the final struggle is likely to take place on the floors of Congress. These American producers are as zealous in defense of their interests, naturally, as the insular growers and refiners, and they have the advantage of political representation.

Beet sugar growing extends over a wide belt of states, although commercial cane growing is confined to two. For decades, as beet sugar growing spread in the United States, it became more and more a political factor, contributing not only to tariffs on a product for which annual imports of two-thirds of consumption are necessary, but under the new deal providing rigid prohibitions on imports over agreed figures. Moreover, these same sugar interests were highly influential in bringing about passage of the Philippine Independence Act, and now support any move to expedite the date of independence.

RECEIVE TELEGRAM FROM PRINCE CHICHIBU

On Wednesday, the Japan-British Society dispatched the following telegram to Viscount Yoshitami Matsudaira, Head of the Suite of H.I.H. Prince Chichibu, at the Hyde Park Hotel, London:

"Please communicate to Prince Chichibu the Japan-British Society's respectful hopes for His Imperial Highness' speedy recovery. Gadsby, Honorary Secretary."

On the following day, the following reply was received:

"Desired by Prince Chichibu to thank Japan-British Society for its kind message. Matsudaira."

ON BOARD HARUNA MARU

Among those who will arrive in Kobe on board the N. Y. K. liner Haruna Maru at 6:30 p.m. today from London are:

The Rev. and Mrs. G. Dempsie, Mrs. W. A. Lambert, Mr. West, Mr. Fisher, Mr. F. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Habluetsel and child, Mr. and Mrs. G. Tuit, Miss G. Buch and Mrs. Lydia Boesveld-Schaiman and child.

TO BE AT HOME

Mrs. de Romer, wife of the Polish Minister will be at home for the last time this season between 5 and 7 p.m. Monday June 14.

MRS. DHARAMDAS PASSES

Mrs. S. Dharamdas aunt of Mr. W. Dalamal, proprietor of Messrs. Dalamal and Sons, No. 76 Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, who has been ill for about one year, died at the home of Mr. Dalamal, Thursday morning. The funeral service was held at house at 5 p.m. Thursday and was attended by representatives of local Indian firms and Japanese and foreign business men.

ENTERTAIN AT DINNER

The French Ambassador and Mrs. Arsene-Henry were hosts last evening at an informal dinner at which the guests were the Turkish Ambassador and Mrs. Gerede; the Czechoslovakian Minister, Mr. Havlicek; Mrs. Sawada; the German Military Attache and Mrs. Ott, the Belgian Secretary and Mrs. Iweins d'Eeckhoutte; Miss Evangeline Bell and the French Secretary, Mr. d'Andurain de Maytie.

HOST AT DINNER

The Norwegian First Secretary Mr. Leif B. Buch entertained at dinner Thursday when his guests were: The Netherlands Charge d'Affaires and Mrs. Van Roijen, the French Air Attache and Mrs. Max Bruyere and Miss Ellen Downes.

ENTERTAIN AT DANCE

The British Air Attache and Mrs. R. W. Chappell entertained a large number of friends Thursday at a buffet supper and dance given in honor of Miss Virginia Bell and Mr. Ashley Clarke. Miss Bell and Mr. Ashley Clarke will be married Tuesday.

ENTERTAINS AT LUNCHEON

Mrs. Robert Rouas entertained at luncheon party at the Marunouchi Kaikan Thursday. Her guests were Mrs. J. D. Mason, Mrs. S. M. Wilkinson, Mrs. D. D. MacGregor, Mrs. James A. Rabbit, Mrs. Marjorie Brown, Mrs. Outerbrige, Miss Harriet Franklin, Mrs. Ray G. Marshall, Miss Marguerite Graham.

WOMEN' CLUB LIBRARY

The library of the Tokyo Women's Club will be open from 2 to 5:30 p.m. June 14, 21 and 28. Books may be taken out for the summer on any of these dates. The library will be closed from June 28 till September 20.

GUEST OF MRS. RABBITT

Mrs. L. M. Wilkinson, the bridge expert, who has been staying at the Imperial Hotel, has left the hotel to be the guest of Mrs. James A. Rabbitt for a few weeks before going to Karuizawa, Mrs. Wilkinson plans to give demonstrated lectures and to conduct classes.

DANCE AT Y.C.A.C.

A formal dance will be held at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club Saturday. The music will be provided by the Columbia orchestra.

ENTERTAIN AT COCKTAIL PARTY

The Consul for Panama at Yokohama and Mrs. Briceno entertained at a cocktail party at their home in Negishi Thursday.

ARRIVES IN YOKOHAMA

Mrs. Frank Huggins, formerly Miss Tatsu Yamamoto, arrived in Yokohama Wednesday on board the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Asia from Canada to visit with her mother Mrs. August Bazin.

TO CELEBRATE FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

The Japan Nickel Information Bureau will celebrate the fifth anniversary of its establishment at a scientific lecture meeting and dinner to be held at the Imperial Railway Association Hall from 5:30 p.m. Saturday. The meeting will be followed by a dinner at 7:30 p.m. in the dining hall of the Imperial Railway Association. About 250 guests are expected to be present at both the meeting and dinner.

The lecture meeting will be opened with an address of greeting by Mr. James A. Rabbitt, adviser to the Japan Nickel Information Bureau. Three scientific lectures will then be delivered by metallurgical authorities as follows:

"Use of Nickel in the Magnetic Alloys," by Dr. Kotaro Honda, president of the Tohoku Imperial University; "On the Constitutional Diagram of Alloys with Nickel as the Chief Constituent," by Dr. Hideo Nishimura, Professor at the Kyoto Imperial University; "On the Metallic Materials Containing Nickel," by Dr. Tokushichi Mishima, assistant Professor at the Tokyo Imperial University.

The meeting will be closed with an address by Dr. Benzo Katsura, Professor Emeritus, Tokyo Imperial University.

Since its establishment in 1932 the Japan Nickel Information Bureau has published the scientific quarterly, Japan Nickel Review, and many technical handbooks on various aspects of nickel metallurgy. It holds frequent lecture meetings on scientific subjects and conducts a free technical service on metallurgical problems for the benefit of users of modern alloys.

TO INAUGURATE ASSOCIATION OF FLOWER ARRANGEMENT

The inauguration ceremony of the Association of masters of flower arrangement was held at the Tokyo Kaikan, Marunouchi, at 2:30 p.m. Thursday and Count Keigo Kiyoura was named to be President of the association.

MR. MATSUOKA COMES TO TOKYO

Mr. Yosuke Matsuoka, President of the South Manchuria Railways Company arrived at Tokyo Station from Dairen, at 3 p.m. Thursday and will stay in Tokyo for some time on business.

TO HOLD SECOND ORCHESTRAL RECITAL

Dr. and Mrs. Felix Weingartner will give their second orchestral recital at the Hibiya Public Hall at 7:30 p.m. June 16. They will conduct the New Symphony Orchestra of Tokyo.

TO HOLD PERIODICAL RECITAL

Radio Advertising

the best hours of the best days. Radio stations remain aloof from the argument over best days, charge as much for Monday evening as for Sunday, infuriate advertisers who argue that one hour of a specific night can not be worth the same as any other hour of any other night.

For an hour's time over ninety-two CBS broadcasting stations at 9 P.M. Sunday the Ford Company pays $12,000 to $15,000. For an hour's time on Monday evening, over fifty-eight stations of the NBC red network, National Dairy Products Corporation (Kraft cheese) pays an estimated $18,660. Fees such as these obtain for the 6 P.M. to 11 P.M. evening hours. From 8 A.M. to 6 P.M. advertisers can get bargain rates, pay only half of the night fees. On Sunday, day rates are roughly three-quarters those of night fees

The big-scale producer of automobiles, soaps and medicines has learned that stars cost him 25 per cent of his total program costs. If he stakes out what he considers an attractive hour, he must protect it with a star who will hold audiences in which fingers ever are twitching to dial competitors' attractions making a stand a few kilocycles away.

Advertisers and entertains mostly fret over the possibility that a high-powered competing program will move in on their hour. The Lehn and Fink Company (Pebeco toothpaste), which hired Eddie Cantor last year at a handsome salary, found to its dismay that Maj. Edward Bowes and his amateurs were wooing listeners away. Later, when the round-eyed comedian had shaken off the Major, he found himself entangled with the widely popular Jack Benny program. Now the Texas Company (Texaco) pays Cantor $10,000 weekly, is happily free from major competition at its hour. So panicky have advertisers become over competition that established commercial programs are likely to crowd major competitors from the air and force radio executives to interpose sustaining programs.

Advertisers are tight-lipped about radio stars' salaries. The stars themselves, however, are not as reticent, like to let the cat out of the bag in order to impress possible future employers and boost their stock.

Variety, show-business spokesman, which computes radio stars' salaries, credits Major Bowes with receiving $15,000 weekly from the Chrysler Motor Corporation. Ed Wynn, Variety gossips, gets $5,500 from the Axton-Fisher Tobacco Company (Spuds); Amos 'n' Andy receive $5,000 weekly from the Pepsodent Company; Kate Smith receives $3,000 from the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co.; Al Jolson reputedly receives $5,000 from Lever Brothers.

When Jack Benny hopped, skipped and jumped from Canada Dry to General Motors (Chevrolet) to General Tires to General Foods, his salary soared with every move. When George Burns and Gracie Allen flitted from the General Cigar Company to Campbell's Soup Company to General Foods Corporation (Grape-Nuts), their stock spurted upward.

Radio-star shopping is costly to radio advertisers, for switches by radio luminaries seldom go without salary boosts. Last week, Variety gossiped that Walter Winchell, now receiving $2,500 weekly from the Andrew W. Jergens Company (Jergen's Lotion), was "being offered around" at $5,500, that an automobile manufacturer "was interested"

Neither on stars, radio, time nor on supplementary costs do sponsors or agencies spare the horses. To supervise the Ford program, two executives of the N. W. Ayer & Son Co. spend three days weekly in Detroit, return to New York "to live" the rest of the week. The announcer, Truman Bradley, commutes once weekly from Chicago to Detroit to put in his night's stint for the Ford broadcast at Detroit.

Because New York, Chicago and Los Angeles alone boast complete radio facilities, the Ford Company has been paying a $135 fee to "pipe" its broadcast via American Telephone & Telegraph Company wires from Detroit to Chicago. Technicians watching the Ford program from the control-room, as a result, hear the music as it is relayed from Chicago, not as it emerges from the instruments in the Detroit auditorium.

Advertisers and radio executives shrug their shoulders at the talk of costs, dig down into research files to produce evidence that radio "pulls." Quaker Oats Company employes were hard-pressed to mail 130,000 dolls following a series of thirteen broadcasts in which the dolls were offered.

In six years, the Metropolitan Life Insuarnce Company has distributed more than 1,000,000 exercise-charts to listeners.

Followers of the Ford hour asked for and received more than 6,000,000 copies of the talks by W. J. Cameron, Ford Vice-President.

The Mutual Broadcasting System likes to point to the experience of L. Bamberger & Co., Newark, New Jersey, department store, which sold 5,000 pairs of stockings, 4,000 breakfast-sets and other items totaling $20,000 following a radio program offer

Big News

"We better make a front-page story of this wedding," remarked the editor.

"Why?" asked the society reporter in surprise. "They aren't very prominent people."

"That may be," he replied, "but this is the first account of a wedding you have turned in for ages that hasn't had as a last line. They will reside with the bride's parents."

these organizations and most foreign governments will be invited to send groups of delegates to the Congress.

"Arrangements will be made for a series of visits of inspection to the leading hospitals, clinics, health centers, medical organizations, sanitary institutions, and other places of interest in New York City and vicinity. Both the official and private agencies engaged in public health activities throughout the metropolitan area will be invited to assist the National Health Council in the entertainment of its distinguished foreign guests."

To Prevent Ills

It is expected that speakers and exhibits will be concerned more with the problems and methods of preventing ills than with technical aspects of the treatment and cure of disease. Some of the subjects that will be discussed are indicated by the following list of active member agencies in the National Health Council: American Society for the Hard of Hearing, Inc.; American Heart Association; American Public Health Association; American Red Cross; American Social Hygiene Association; American Society for the Control of Cancer; Conference of State and Provincial Health Authorities of North America; Maternity Center Association, National Committee of Health Councill Executives; National Committee for Mental Hygiene; National Organization for Public Health Nursing; National Society for the Prevention of Blindness; National Tuberculosis Association.

The United States Children's Bureau and the United States Public Health Service are advisory members of the Council. The American Nurses' Association and the Foundation for Positive Health are associate members.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

The King Who Pawned His Crown

Henry V (1387-1422) of England, founder of the British Navy and of the military, maritime and international law, pawned his crown to obtain funds for his expedition against France in 1417. The crown, described as weighing 4 pounds and containing 56 rubies, 45 sapphires, 8 diamonds and 7 great pearls, was pledged with the Abbot of Westminster for 800 pounds and was later redeemed by the debtor's son, King Henry VI.

Mexico Places

The new "salesmen's tax" was included in the Presidential decree of April 27, amending Article 14 of the Mexican Income Tax Law. The law went into effect on March 13, but it is only with the formal notification that they must pay that it has come to the attention of the United States companies. The amendment declares: "Agents, commission agents or representatives of foreign companies that do not have branches in the national territory must pay a tax corresponding to the companies they represent upon the amount of the companies' income, deducting therefrom 65 per cent."

According to the government's definition a branch is any office or establishment of a foreign concern maintaining an accounting and sales office to determine the taxes due the Mexican Government.

What the new law means in a specific instance is that a United States salesman not maintaining a "branch" here and doing a moderate business of $100,000 annually must pay a 4.8 per cent tax for his company on $35,000 of this income. This, in addition to the company's income tax in the United States, virtually erases all profits, it is held.

The new Mexican high tariffs make it difficult to raise sales prices and still get business. The Mexican income tax rises from 2 per cent to 12.3 per cent on a sliding scale, so that taxes will be higher on more sizeable sales.

Hitherto foreign companies could maintain promotional offices in Mexico without paying taxes, although the actual sales made here through salesmen were subject to a tax. However, if books were not kept in Mexico it was difficult to collect them, according to the Mexican authorities, who say unofficially that the new high tax is intended to force the companies to keep books.

United States sources asserted, however, that under the former system the Mexican Government committee decided what would be reasonable taxes on sales of various articles and that these were paid. The salesman who came into Mexico once or twice a year attempting to get a small volume of business for his company was not molested, but will have to pay a tax in the future.

End Of Airships

vestigation there by the Commerce Department board. One of the commissioners charged with planning and administering the United States Merchant Marine is Admiral Emory S. Land, formerly head of the navy's helium board. He does not believe that the Hindenburg accident should mean the closing of the door to lighter-than-air as a transport of commerce.

The commission, before the accident, was seriously considering the possibility of an amendment to the Merchant Marine Act so that both operators of airplanes and airships might have the same advantages presented to operators of surface craft, the privilege of obtaining government funds on a differential basis up to 50 per cent of the cost of the craft, and the additional privilege of borrowing 75 per cent of the remaining cost at low interest over a twenty-year period.

Navy Remains Cool

This policy, it was said, had the approval of both the Navy and the Commerce Departments. Those in-charge of naval destinies at this time are not enthusiastic—and before the Hindenburg crash even were not enthusiastic — over lighter-than-air for the navy. Although the Durand board reported favorably months ago on the continuance of a lighter-than-air program and although Secretary Swanson said at the time of the board's appointment that the navy would take its advice, nothing has been said or done about the matter since then, and the report has been in the Secretary's hands for months.

However, the navy is very much in favor—or was a few days ago—of the commercial development of the big rigid airships, and look upon them as a very valuable auxiliary in wartime.

There is no indication that the Hindenburg disaster has changed their minds, and Colonel J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce in Charge of Aeronautics, is firmly convinced that we must go ahead with the airship if we are to keep pace with Germany.

"We have learned one valuable lesson in the destruction and tragedy of the Hindenburg," Colonel Johnson said. "There was no structural failure even in that awful fire. The great ship's rigid structure held firm under the terrific heat and the explosions and settled to the ground without collapse. That proves that those big ships can be built sturdily enough to withstand the severest shocks. The Germans know how to do it and so can we. The fire hazard can be avoided through the use of helium."

One of the objections to helium is its cost, but when the government first began to extract it from natural gases it cost something like a dollar a cubic foot. That cost dropped to $80 a thousand within a few years, then to $26 a thousand as methods improved and the demand increased, and the scientists believe that it could be cut to $5 a thousand cubic feet in view of the developments in the past.

Another objection, from the German point of view, is the fact that helium is not as efficient a lift gas as hydrogen and its use in a ship of the Hindenburg class would cut its payload by several tons. But future refinement in design and the development of more economical power plants are held to contain the answer to this objection.

Mr. Roper and his associates believe that we should go ahead, at least with practical studies. The Commerce Secretary's Business Advisory Council only a few months ago laid before him their report, a report that he had on his desk for study a day or two ago, in which the following recommendations were listed "for immediate action":

The construction and operation of rigid airships should be vigorously prosecuted in both commercial and naval service; that the Commerce Department be charged with the execution of the commercial phases of an airship policy and the Navy Department with the military phases; that requests be made to the "next Congress" (the present Congress), for funds to carry out the policy; and that as soon as funds could be made available a construction program should be started calling for the building of an East Coast terminal, the building of the first of a fleet of commercial rigid airships to alternate with foreign service, the building of a moderate-sized navy airship for training and the building of an experimental navy airship as as a step in the development of "promising types."

The Hindenburg fire, even with the loss of life that accompanied it, aeronautical authorities point out, still leaves the airship on the record as the safest passenger transport in the history of commerce.

That policy outlined by the Business Advisory Council many months ago is still the policy the council is likely to recommend in its supplementary report to the President soon. In addition, it is probable that the council will advocate a reciprocal arrangement with Germany whereby in exchange for helium for commercial purposes Germany will help train our personnel on her own ships.

Italians Fast Speeding

have had almost fifty feet added to their bows and five knots to their speed, and larger guns give them increased protection.

The building program for this next fiscal year has not been announced, but it will certainly include a considerable number of submarines, destroyers and torpedo boats, as well as several cruisers.

The budget estimates for the navy have increased by 248,000,000 lire. Both officers and men will be slightly increased in number next year, and by 1941 a 50 per cent increase in officer personnel is planned.

A high naval command in East Africa has been established and the budget report notes that it is now time for Italy, because of increased responsibilities in the East African colonies, to establish a blue-water fleet rather than a narrow-seas fleet alone. This indicates that Italy's naval rivalry with Britain in the Mediterranean may be extended to the Indian Ocean.

Army's Budget Biggest

The army's budget is still the largest of the three services, although its actual increase this and next year will be smaller than either of the others. The troops still in Africa are not included in these budget estimates, so it is difficult to gauge the real amount being spent.

Exclusive of the troops still in East Africa and those in Libya, the army is organized in four army commands and thirteen corps areas, consisting of thirty infantry divisions, five Alpine divisions three "celere" (swift) divisions, two motorized divisions, one motor mechanized brigade and various other minor units.

The Italian Army is built around the theory that any war it fights must be a war of quick decision and therefore it is intended to be highly mobile, with plenty of motor transport and mechanized forces.

However, the Italians are still retaining animal transport for use along the mountainous northern frontier. The "celere" divisions consist of cavalry, a detachment of the famous Bersaglieri with their bicycles in lorries, light tanks and mechanized artillery.

The two motorized divisions, with a third being formed, are simply light infantry divisions transported in trucks. The motor mechanized brigade, which is still an experimental unit, has detachments of light tanks, Bersaglieri in lorries, a detachment of machine-guns mounted on motorcycle side cars and mechanized artillery.

1,000 to 1,500 Tanks

In all, the Italians are reputed to have from 1,000 to 1,500 tanks with the active units and about 500 others in reserve. Almost all the tanks are light, two-man Fiats that have not proved very satisfactory, judging from experiences in Ethiopia and Spain. The Italians have a few medium tanks and are said to be developing a new eight or nine-ton tank.

The army is well-equipped with artillery, but a lot of it is old and some pieces are Austrian guns that were taken after the World War.

The army is also believed to have machine-guns, rifles, small arms and other equipment in sufficient quantity to put 900,000 bayonets, or an army of about 1,200,000 men, in the field almost immediately. This belief is borne out by the mobilization during the Ethiopian conflict.

Be Ready To Save

vastating reply to all the efforts of the lovers of peace.

"But what is worse than this, peace in some quarters is proclaimed as a bad dream and war is glorified as an ideal for rational men. As long as the British Empire lasts we will raise our voice against these false gods.

"Let me end in this, the last speech I shall make before a great audience as Prime Minister of this country, let me proclaim my faith, which is the faith of millions of all races from end to end of the British Empire:

"Here we have ceased to be an island, but we are still an empire. And what is her secret? Freedom, ordered freedom within the law, with force in the background and not in the foreground; a society in which authority and freedom are blended in due proportions, in which State and citizen are both ends and means. An Empire, organized for peace and for the free development of the individual in and through an infinite variety of voluntary associations that neither defy the State nor its rulers.

"The old doctrine of the Divine Right of Kings has gone, but we have no intention of erecting in its place a new doctrine of the Divine Right of States, for no State that ever was is worthy of a free man's worship.

"The young king and queen whom we have delighted to honor in these memorable days are the servants of the sovereign people. To them, as your chairman told you, they have dedicated themselves. That is the magic of monarchy which is everlasting.

King Is Symbol of Unity

"The king is the symbol of the union, not only of an empire, but of a society which is held together by a common view of the fundamental nature of men. It is neither the worship of a tribe nor of a class. It is a faith, a value placed upon the individual, derived from the Christian religion. The Christian State proclaims human personality to be supreme; the servile State denies it.

"Every compromise with the infinite value of the human soul leads straight back to savagery and to the jungle. Dispel truths of our religion, and what follows? The insolence of dominion and the cruelty of depotism. Denounce religion as the opium of the people, and you'll swiftly proceed to denounce political liberty and civil liberty as opium. Freedom of speech goes, intolerance follows and justice is no more.

"The fruits of the free spirit of men do not grow in the garden of tyranny. It's been well said that slavery is a weed that grows in every soil. As long as we have the wisdom to keep the sovereign authority of this country as the sanctuary of liberty, the sacred temple consecrated to our common faith, men will turn their faces toward us and draw their breaths more freely.

"Association of the peoples of the empire is rooted, and their fellowship is rooted in this doctrine of essential dignity of the individual human soul. That is the English secret, however feebly and faintly we have at times and places embraced and obeyed it.

"The torch I would hand to you and would ask you to pass from hand to hand along the pathways of the empire is a great Christian truth rekindled anew in each ardent generation. Use men as ends and never merely as means and live for the brotherhood of man, which implies the fatherhood of God (cheers).

"The brotherhood of man today is often denied and derided and called foolishness, but it is in fact one of the foolish things in the world which God has chosen to confound the wise and the world is confounded by daily. We may evade it; we may deny it, but we shall find no rest for ourselves nor the world until we acknowledge it as the ultimate wisdom.

"That is the message I've tried to deliver as Prime Miniter of England in a hundred speeches. I can think of no better message to give you to take away tonight than that."

Crime Prevention In Britain Gains By Borstal Tests

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON.—Experiments made recently in regard to the temperamental bias, mechanical skill, and general adaptability of youthful offenders have shown that, when individual character is understood and individual occupation is provided to meet its needs, much may be done in the way of crime prevention.

The experiment was organized by the National Institute of Industrial Psychology at the request of the Prison Commissioners. It was started in 1936, was carried out in connection with lads who, between the ages of 16 and 21, had been sentenced to periods of training in one or other of the Borstal Institutions, and its results are published in a report issued by the Home Office.

The Prison Commisioners believe that, in the endeavor to "reshape" the lives of young offenders—which is the main objective of Borstal training—the custom of dealing with lads as though they were a flock of sheep in which everyone is more or less a duplicate of everyone else, constitutes a profound mistake.

Satisfying Work

Satisfaction in work, coupled with an ability to satisfy, must, they believe, serve in the best possible way to offset that human tendency to become despondent in regard to personal failures and must, in that measure, serve to set offenders upon a self-respecting footing.

The experiment was based, therefore, upon a preliminary examination of lads while still at the Boys' Prison at Wormwood Scrubs awaiting distribution to the various Borstal Institutions. Four hundred lads were examined and every other candidate was placed in what was called a "recommended" group—was sent forward, that is, with a recommendation as to which work party or parties he should be assigned to during his period of training.

The remainder went forward in a "control" group—without special recommendation as to assignment, their direction being left to the decision of their future house masters.

The examination was made as exhaustive as time and opportunity permitted. Each lad was subjected to pencil and paper tests of his ability to judge shapes and sizes and to reproduce them. Each was given simple intelligence tests. The mechanical ability of each was tried by the putting together of parts of common mechanical objects. Manual dexterity was measured. Individual performance was calculated in regard to the assembling of wooden blocks in given patterns.

Friendly Interviews

Finally, each one was given the opportunity to explain his ideas, aspirations and difficulties to his examiner during one or more interviews of considerable length in an atmosphere where friendliness made confidences easy.

It is not claimed that the experiments were altogether watertight. Lads of the "recommended" group were not always able to stay in the places assigned to them, while lads of the "control" group undoubtedly influenced their house master's choice of a work party through hints they had gleaned during their examination.

Nevertheless, nearly 70 per cent of the lads in the "recommended" group reached a standard of "good or very good" in their regular work at Borstal. The percentage of "control" group lads who reached a similar standard totaled only 45.6. Moreover, the Prison Commissioners have been sufficiently impressed to recommend that training in examination methods shall be given in future to Borstal house masters and assistant house masters, and such training has, in more than one instance, already been started.

Cornstarch Used

"Now it has been found that cancer sera may be differentiated from normal by a remarkable deficiency in 'sulphydryl-activity.'

"This difference is found to be highly specific for cancer, since sera from patients with benign tumors show the normal activating power."

Pioneering work in this same type of chemical reaction has been done at the Lankenau Research Institute here under the direction of Dr. Stanley P. Reimann.

Dr. Frederick S. Hammett, scientific director and biologist of the institute's staff, is completing at its marine laboratory on Cape Cod what his associates expect to be an important contribution to the scientific, calculable chemical forces constituting the "design of living" so far as protein matter of the normal cell is concerned.

Dr. Baldwin Lucke of the Department of Pathology of the University of Pennsylvania Medical School had reported previously a type of cancerous growth in the leopard frog which he believes is transmissible by a virus. He now has conceived a procedure for measuring the rate and volume of permeability of the living cell.

This technique is expected to provide science with another yardstick in studying cancer-producing chemical invaders.

The International Cancer Research Foundation paid grants totaling $306,877.98 last year. Its total assets as of Dec. 31 were $2,796,601.24.

PARIS 1937

International Exposition of Arts and Crafts

What is the "carte de légitimation"?

The "carte de légitimation" offers the following advantages to the visitors of the Paris Exposition now open until November 1937:

TO GIVE ENTERTAINMENT

A Supporting Committee for the Takinogawa Gakuen has recently been formed and this committee has planned a program to raise a fund for this Gakuen for June 26 at the Hibiya Public Hall.

The Takinogawa Gakuen is a Christian operated institution for the study and care of feeble-minded children as well a research laboratory to study and find solutions for the correction of abnormal conditions affecting children. The Gakuen was established in 1891 by Mr. Ryoichi Ishii. The research laboratory and the printing plant (to partially support the work) was established in Sugamo, while the actual home chapel, classrooms dormitories and residences for the staff are now in Kitatamagun.

Seventy boys and girls are at present being cared for by the institution while several workers are being taught how to care for such children.

The present financial condition of Takinogawa Gakuen is serious owing to the fact that land in Sugamo owned by the school has not yet been sold. Pending the sale of this ground the institution appeals to its friends to aid with the current operating funds. Approximately ¥4000 must be raised in 1937 for pressing equipment needs.

The Supporting Committee is composed of Dowager Princess Etsuko Ichijo, Chairman, Countess Nobuko Todo, Secretary, Mrs. Joseph Clark Grew, Dowager Countess Fumiko Aoyama, Dowager Countess Matsuko Shimazu, Viscountess Takeko Todo, Mrs. Nakako Hasegawa, Baroness Takeko Nishi, Miss Michiko Toyoda, Mrs. Koko Ohashi, Dowager Baroness Keiko Sonoda, Mrs. Kiyoko Tsurumi, Dowager Baroness Kiyoko Nabeshima, Miss Toyoko Kurokawa, Mrs. Iyoko Kubo, Countess Yasuko Matsudaira, Mrs. Namie Masuda, Mrs. Senko Matsumoto, Mrs. Hamako Debuchi, Princess Shizuko Sanjo, Miss Otona Sakai and Mrs. Masayo Hinata.

Britain Takes

ful than ever.

If he had any favorite among his children it probably was Austen, whom he trained for a career in politics in his own footsteps. It was Austen who made the maiden speech which Gladstone said at the time must have been "dear and refreshing to a father's heart"; Neville was destined for the countinghouse. He was sent away as a young man to manage a plantation in the Bahamas; then he came back to Birmingham to enter his father's business, and did not appear in national politics until he was 47, when his father was dead and his half brother, Austen, had been a Cabinet Minister for almost fourteen years.

But Neville Chamberlain had watched his father carefully, not only in his early phase as a civic reformer but in his second incarnation as a crusader for a tariff with empire preference. To Neville, far more than to his more conspicuous half brother, came the opportunity to follow in his father's footsteps. During the war, when Austen was at the India Office in charge of the disastrous Mesopotamian campaign, Neville was Lord Mayor of Birmingham, creating the first municipal bank in the country and the most successful in the world. While Austen was winning world-wide acclaim with the Locarno settlement in Europe Neville was Minister of Health, laying the foundation of better housing for millions of British wage-earners.

It revealed the character of the man that he was offered the Chancellorship of the Exchequer and the second highest political position in the land but preferred to stay at the Ministry of Health, where he could fight his father's battles for social betterment.

More recently Neville, not Austen, had the intense satisfaction of enacting into law the policy of imperial preference which his father had struggled in vain to achieve. And now it is Neville who steps into the dazzling position which even his father could not reach. How "dear and refreshing" it would be to Joseph Chamberlain if he could see his businessman-son now!

At least two faults in Neville Chamberlain's mental equipment he did not inherit from his father. He has never been able to understand America or Americans, although he was always as devoted to his American stepmother as any son could be. Joseph Chamberlain felt at home with Americans and they with him; Neville has never been happiest in dealing with Americans, nor will he be at his best in the future in handling Anglo-American problems. A lack of interest has led to ignorance, and ignorance to occasional blunders. The contemptuous references to the Middle West which once punctuated Mr. Chamberlain's speeches could only have been the result of ignorance; and it is possible that Mr Chamberlain's complacent attitude toward default on the war debts springs from a similar failure to understand how deeply the United States cares about the debts even today.

Mr. Chamberlain is inclined, also, in comparison to his father, to be unadaptable. It will be hard to convince him that the British imperial tariff system built at Ottawa in 1932 is in any sense an obstacle to the lowering of trade barriers elsewhere. The emotional allegiance to an empire tariff is even stronger in Joseph Chamberlain's son than the attachment to free trade in the case of an idealist like Secretary Hull. Mr. Chamberlain may profess his interest from time to time in the reduction of trade barriers, but it will not be surprising if he tries to increase the present British duties on agricultural produce rather than lower them. On the basis of Mr. Chamberlain's political record and his emotional predilections, the prospects of any appreciable reduction of British tariffs in an Anglo-American trade treaty are not overbright.

He probably will be high-handed in the future in dealing with the Cabinet and with the House of Commons, and he may suffer some of the unpopularity which often comes to leaders who really attempt to lead. Already it is said that Anthony Eden takes his orders from Mr. Chamberlain, and that the new Prime Minister intends to be his own Foreign Secretary in all but name. It is said, too, that the new profits tax was Mr. Chamberlains own invention, devised without the help of his experts at the Treasury and sent to the House of Commons in the face of serious misgivings from the civil servants upon whom a Chancellor of the Exchequer usually relies. It is wholly characteristic of Mr. Chamberlain's determined mind that he intends to push his profits tax onto the statute book without very drastic changes, in spite of the unprecedented outcry it has aroused.

Neville Chamberlain, like his father, is a man of strong convictions. From the latest budget episode and many others in Mr. Chamberlain's career, it is obvious that Britain will have a liberal Prime Minister. He calls himself a true-blue Conservative and pretends to have no patience with socialism or even the liberalism of the old free-trade school; yet he is a perfect example of the "Tory Socials" who measures the strength of his opposition and then anticipates it by wise and humane social legislation. Labor will have no real grievances under the new regime if Mr. Chamberlain can have his way.

Moreover, he believes in democracy with all his heart and soul, and he shares with Mr. Baldwin a sense of disgust at the repressions, the sabre-rattling and the strutting of Europe's dictatorships, whether Fascist or Communist. In foreign policy he has already shown his belief that Germany is the overmastering problem for Britain at the present time, and that all other difficulties in foreign relations, Anglo-Italian and Anglo-Japanese included, are of secondary importance. He never shared his half brother's passionate belief in the League of Nations, nor has he ever felt tempted since the war to share his father's faith in Germany as a potential partner of Britain and the United States. Britain under Neville Chamberlain will do her utmost to keep out of trouble, and will keep her hands free of new commitments as long as she can. But she is apt to show a more decisive tone toward Germany from now on.

It will mean something to Britain to have a forceful and determined leader after so many years of Stanley Baldwin. The new Prime Minister may not be as deep as Mr. Baldwin, but his mind is sharper and his perception quicker. He is coolly intellectual in his mental processes. He will take his time, like so many British businessmen, in coming to a decision, and he will not be anxious to cross bridges before he comes to them.

Island.

Islands Inside the Reef

The coral's westward progress from the Barrier to the Queensland coast is checked by a variety of causes. Chief among these is the chain of islands, of granite or other rock formation which show them to have been in earlier times portion of the mainland. Some rise to 1500 feet out of the sea.

The largest Hinchinbrook Island is 30 miles long and rises to a height of over 3000 feet. Farther north, in the Straits, are islands such as Darnley and Murray, the soil and vegetation of which, like Samoa, Tahiti and Hawaii, show them to have been of volcanic origin.

Their inner chain of islands, these former mainland mountain tops, have a lure of their own. They are easiest of access from the coast and offer facilities to holiday makers that are being exploited increasingly.

Vast Multitude of Birds

Figures that only astronomers normally employ are necessary when describing the bird population of the Barrier Islands. On one 3000-acre island the number of mutton birds on the ground was estimated at between one and two millions, with at least half that number of gannets in the branches overhead.

Or scores of the islands the vegetation is so dense as to make them impenetrable. Sixty-foot-high Pisonias are perhaps the most widely distributed, but Pandanus trees, with their stilt-like roots, beach oaks, and tournefortias are typical.

Coconut palms have been planted on some islands by the Queensland Government. Farther north, on the muddy shores of islands close to the coast, dense mangrove forests are conspicuous. Wattles, eucalypts, tea-trees and umbrella trees occur in great profusion. Ferns and orchids are found in the gullies.

Commercial Possibilities

These fifty million acres of island-studded, intra-reef waters should be one of Australia's greatest assets. Politically they may be reckoned among her liabilities. Their exploitation is already almost wholly in alien hands.

In the commercial development of the Barrier, the tourist traffic is the only one in which Australians have no foreign competition. Pearl shell has hitherto been the Barrier's greatest commercial asset, but, as with the trochus shell and beche-de-mer fisheries, control has passed into Japanese hands.

Present prices of pearl shell are about £150 a ton; the world's surplus stocks have been disposed of, and the outlook for the eight Australian-owned and controlled fishing companies on Thursday Island is brighter. Over the last ten years the pearl-shell industry has been worth an average of £123,000 a year to the Barrier harvesters.

Rivalry in Shell Market

Much depends upon whether the pearl shell can win back the markets lost to cheaper and inferior trochus shell. From a yield of 1048 tons in 1916, the Barrier Reef trochus shell output fell to an average of 513 tons in the 1930-34 period, and it is frequently charged that even this output is only maintained by the marketing of increased quantities of smaller shell.

For reasons similar to those which compelled the California Legislature to protect its crab-fishing industry, the Queensland Government in 1932 prohibited the taking of "chicken shell," that is, under 2½ inches in diameter. It is claimed that such laws easily can, and often are, evaded.

Prices of trochus shell have varied from £17 to £90 a ton (the 1926 all-high record). Average over the past five years has been £69 a ton. The meat content of the shell brings about £60 a ton in China, but practically the whole of the shell goes to Japan, where button-making is a "cottage" industry.

Japanese Manage Crews

The bech-de-mer, or trepang, industry comes next in importance on the Barrier. As in the pearl and trochus fishing boats, the skipper is almost invariably a Japanese, with a crew of Malays, Australian aborigines, Torres Strait and South Sea Islanders.

Values of the catches vary greatly, depending on the variety of sea-slug taken, and range from £30 to more than £300 a ton. The return over the last 10 years for which figures are available has averaged £93 a ton, for an average annual production of 213 tons.

Australia imports £1,000,000 worth of sea foods annually. Yet the waters of the Great Barrier Reef are a well-stocked larder, and the Commonwealth Government's first fishery survey vessel has yet to be launched.

The striped Spanish mackerel, or tunny, and the groper, one of the perch family, do not exhaust possibilities of large-scale commercial development. Kingfish, queenfish, pike, albacore, bonito, tailer, rock cod, red emperors, snapper, coral bream and coral trout abound; while no effort has ever been made to assess the potential value of huge shoals of herring pilchards, sprats and hardyheads.

Notes On Tomorrow

agreements on a basis of reciprocity." And the measures suggested by your Japanese Economic Federation in proposing a trade relationship are based on the utter understanding of international courtesy. International Courtesy. Why not? And who better than Japan can show the way there?

Which brings me back to the possibility of coordinating our joint body of knowledge—religious, scientific, social and industrial. If Japan and the United States of North America were to do that, the world would bear fruit.

Professor Denis Saurat, of the Sorbonne, some years ago made this proposal. He said that the world has adopted certain material conventions: as that two and two make four—perhaps not to Mr. Bertrand Russell, but to most of us, two and two do make four. And water does run down hill, and the laws of hydraulics and of the fulcrum and of projectiles and so on are pretty well fixed and adopted. That is, we have accepted certain material conventions. Also, we have accepted certain loose and rough moral conventions. As, that honesty is the best policy, egoism gets you nowhere, bread cast upon the waters, in one form or another, and so on. But, says Professor Saurat, though we have a body of physical laws true for all men, and a body of moral laws "more or less" true for all men, "so there must be a body of ideas, true for all minds." But as yet we have only individual minds working on problems, in a wide and independent anarchy, with no conscious relationship to a body of ideas on which they can depend, as they now depend on, say, gravitation and hydraulics and honesty. He begs us to search for this third, this metaphysical convention. His suggestion for starting point is the raw material of desires which we all have in common—desires which, like chemical elements, cannot be utilized until they are broken down, subdivided, and resolved into ideas. Love, for example, being broken down into ideas of "beauty, in tensity, expension, high action," and so on. This third convention, this acceptance of a body of recognized ideas would amount to a codification of Ideas. Not a standardization. Rather an uncovering, a revealing of basic idea. As a codicil of Roman law was an uncovering of basic justice.

In a recent magazine article, Mr. H. G. Wells makes a similar or an allied plea, for a universal encyclopedia, which shall classify the fundamental knowledge of the nations, and make it immediately available to all people. He too refers to the anarchy in which the men of all nations grope for ideas, both experiential and speculative, whenever they wish to venture upon new areas. For there is no such collected, classified, codified body of knowledge, of idea. Mr. Wells instances Mr. Roosevelt, ready to summon and apply the collective economic Idea to our national situation—but there is no available collective body of such Idea to which he can refer. So he needs must experiment.

Now if two nations, like in aspiration even though unequal in experience—if two nations should set themselves to classify these four bodies of their common knowledge, to make available their common fund of religions of philosophical, of scientific or empirical, of sociopolitical and of industrial Idea, and if the two nations should agree, so far as international trade permitted—agree to be bound by the tenets and findings of that common knowledge, we should have begun at last our world civilization. Interpreted by lines and points, we should have an equilateral triangle:

Japan and the United States of North America. Why select these two? I have said that it is because both nations have a passion for Becoming. Other nations have certain other ideals—when we say Italy, or Germany we know, without re-statement, what that national passion is; England, and we have seen the ideal of Empire shift its terminology to that of the British Commonwealth of Nations; France, and we know her understandable passion for safety; Spain, just now transferring her material preoccupations into socio-political terms; Russia, and we have the privilege of watching a giant laboratory, intent on its own tests, with a proselyting zeal to share its own clinical findings with the rest of the world. So far as Russia is concerned, the new Soviet constitution holds for Russia all codifiable truth down to the present.

John Maynard Keynes has rephrased for Europe your own old wisdom that the universe is an organism. A planet may be an organism. A nation an organism, with karma, even as a person. Thus Japan has a body of spiritual knowledge which remains largely unaffected by social change. "Rather than study an art, get accustomed to it," your proverb runs. I remember my mirth when an acquaintance saw lying on my table the Oxford Book of English Verse, and she said brightly: "Been studying poetry?" Studying it? No—but trying to live it. You have your body of old knowledge—you live it. In religion you retain the old, the codified; you pursue the new in science, in social ideation. The United States of North America broke with the old world not to embrace a new religion, as the old world thought, but to worship according to the inner dictation—to follow the old wisdom not the rule superimposed. We have a body of spiritual knowledge fast. In Japan as in the United States of North America there lives a national karmic wisdom, which teaches unity. "Self-realization" to you, "salvation," as we say to us. Inherited knowledge. Again your proverb. . . . "The shop boy in front of the temple gate repeats the sutra which he never learned." This is so richly true of Japan—and it is a little true of us.

The burden of the proof of this so presumptuous claim for North America's United States lies, I know, with me. It may well amaze you that I dare lay claim, for our sky-scraper land and mechanized routine, to something so exquisite, so fragile, so powerful a center of energy as this. If I were to try, I could but give you something ineffectual—instance rather than proof—like this:

I know a woman of Connecticut who lives in a beautiful modern house, set in a beautiful formal garden. In that house is a little room containing but three objects: A bench, a low stool, and an oil painting of a master.

I know of an office on the thirty-second floor of a building in New York, where is set aside a tiny room furnished with a few chairs and a seated bronze figure and three photographs of the teachers.

All over that land there are meditation groups, meeting at morning, at noon, at twilight—thousands upon thousands who understand this need.

In one of the great commercial hotels of New York, the Pennsylvania Hotel, a thousand people gathered at the hour of the full moon of last May—a Buddhist observance of India.

I know alcoves in the New York Public Library where all but the rarest in the religious literature of the world is on the shelves and is sought and used.

The body of the literature of the Quakers of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, of innumerable esoteric groups are really literally esoteric in significance. I do not speak of cults. I speak of the way of power. The esoteric aspect of Christianity is felt even where it is not known.

If I make mention of our universities stored with sources of beauty—of exhibit rooms filled with beauty's representation of homes where an old culture echoes like a bell—you will know that I know well that these are little besides the ancient culture of Japan—but they are a seed, a seed is life. North America's United States—of fertility and desert, of mountains and prairie, of stretching fields and blue shore line, lies rich to this seed. And there are the islands of Hawaii, lying between your door and ours. To the eye of Hawaii is a place grim with medieval fortification, overlaid with modern devices, but to the inner eye, already a laboratory in human relationship. To the outer eye there trails between these continents now and again a parade of a fleet, a parade against which thousands of us protested, because we know and you know that life is not like that. For I know of what I speak when I say that in the United States the idea of ever attacking Japan never occurs to anybody. But sometimes we do hear there that Japan may sometime attack us. This fear of either nation is not worthy of either nation. Tomorrow-today-we must rid ourselves of it! I speak of eternal verities—of the soul of the United States of North America, which like Japan, loves life and not death. I speak of the soul of Japan, which can be teacher of the soul of the west. We need the wisdom and the culture of Japan, and though you do not need our young passion, yet fused with your power, there would result a center of energy—the high crest of that triangle, on which might burn our common light. I say this here as one who with her crumb of wisdom comes home.

In these two lands there is enough of universal understanding to weld the world in one. May we learn of your old wisdom—even as the shadow follows the shape. Kage no katachi ni shitagan gotoshi.

US To Remove Deadwood In Diplomacy Field

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, May 22.—After saying nothing whatever for three years to increasingly pointed criticisms of his department, Secretary of State Cordell Hull has revealed here that during this entire time he has been very quietly weeding deadwood out of the foreign service, that he has long been considering a modernization of the higher command of the department, and that a process of change to make his organization more efficient is under way.

He chose the occasion of an important shift in the top bracket of American diplomacy for letting it be known that he was aware of the justification for some of the criticism—which has come from high officials of the former Republican administration among others—and that he is taking steps to improve a service of which he is very proud.

First step in the reshuffling process, announced several days ago, was the elevation of Sumner Welles, a career service man, from one of four assistant secretaries of state to the post of second in command as Undersecretary. With this change was the elevation of another of the former assistants to be Counselor of the department. This completed the revision of the high command of the department in a way to relieve Mr. Hull himself much routine detail, and at the same time give him an aide with sufficiently high rank to be able to handle certain special tasks designated to him. Mr. Hull himself expects to be freer to deal with more abstract matters of policy in the future.

American Republics

It will be Mr. Welles' task to deal with current diplomatic questions and with the routine administration of the department. Judge Moore is to handle the increasing number of specialized problems, such as the delicate question of American movie film experts, which are not in the ordinary run of diplomacy but which have become problems for dipmatic handling.

This change in the top bracket of the service is intended to divert much work which previously went direct to Secretary Hull to these two top men.

Improvement in the personnel of the lower ranks has already advanced to the point of elimination from the foreign service during the past two or three years of 40 or 50 persons—Mr. Hull did not give the exact number. He explained that these individuals were the less efficient and that their places have been taken by new appointments from among those who have passed rigid competitive examinations.

Latest announced step in reshuffling within the department is the merging of the division of Latin American affairs and the Mexican divisions into a new Division of American Republics, to better coordinate the interrelated problems of the Latin states to the south.

Record in Emergency

In discussing the modernization process informally with the press, Secretary Hull made it clear that he is not undertaking anything which could be termed a major reorganization, but is attempting to bring the formal organization of the department more into line with changing modern conditions. An example of what already has been accomplished was establishment of a single division to handle the arms traffic. Previously, arms questions had been handled in more than a dozen different divisions.

To critics who charge the foreign service with being a group of "bespatted" Beau Brummels, who shine at social functions, Mr. Hull reported somewhat warmly that whenever a real job has to be done, as in the recent cases of trouble in Addis Ababa and Madrid, the men of the service won general approval for their courage, resourcefulness and ability.

It is clear that such criticisms have irritated Mr. Hull, who is extremely proud of his department and is known to cherish the ambition of leaving it a more efficient organization than he found it. He also is jealous of its comparative freedom from the influence of politics and patronage, and would like to extend the tradition of the career service, which now prevails in the lower ranks, to the higher posts traditionally parceled out by the party high command to wealthy contributors to campaign funds.

Baruch Declares

"scuttle our rights completely and to run the whole distance."

"In case of implements of war, no sales or shipments are permissible at all," Mr. Baruch added. "But, unless the President prescribed otherwise, anything but implements of war could be bought for cash and shipped in American ships."

Says Bill Doesn't Decide

The speaker declared that "it does not seem wise to me to pass a statute which really decides nothing on this subject, and simply passes the buck to the President, making him decide what our policy shall be after war breaks out."

"What this act does really is to transfer from the Congress to the President the right to take steps that might lead to war," Mr. Baruch added.

Asserting that the Administration is building up the nation's defenses, Mr. Baruch declared in conclusion:

"That is the best protection that we could have from involvement in any foreign war. The Pittman act may or may not help. It is a 'speak gently' policy. But the 'big stick' is just as evident."

in the car. He hadn't been gone ten minutes when a six-inch shell hit the hotel just at the junction of the main floor and the sidewalk. It went deep in out of sight and didn't explode. If it had burst, there would not have been enough left of Hipolito and the car to take a picture of. They were about fifteen feet away from where the shell hit. I looked out of the window, saw he was all right, and then went downstairs.

"How are you?" I was fairly average breathless.

"Fine," he said.

"Put the car farther down the street."

"Don't be foolish," he said. "Another one wouldn't drop there in a thousand years. Besides, it didn't explode."

"Put it farther along the street."

"What's the matter with you?" he asked. "You getting windy?"

I tried to give him some money when I left Madrid.

"I don't want anything from you," he said.

"No," I said. "Take it. Go on. Buy something for the family."

"No," he said. "Listen, we had a good time, didn't we?"

You can bet on Franco, or Mussolini, or Hitler, if you want; but my money goes on Hipolito.

Japan Now Wants

goods, the country is promising. But in this field the Japanese exporters have to face the competition of European goods. Its purchasing power, moreover, is necessarily limited by the people's relatively low standard of living. In short, the sanguine hope of the optimists that Manchuria would serve as panacea for Japan's economic ailments has been well nigh shattered.

While Manchuria has proved a disappointment, Japan's economic power is now making phenomenal growth following particularly the recent world-wide improvement in business. This is mainly due to the augmentation of her export and import trade. A few figures may exemplify the point. Japan's total overseas trade amounted in round figures to 2,225,000,000 yen in 1931, but five years later, in 1936, it had increased to 5,500,000,000. Her exports to America amounted to 425,000,000 yen in 1931, but was increased to 550,000,000 in 1936. America's exports to Japan have made an even more spectacular growth: in 1931 it was 342,000,000 yen, but last year it stood at 847,500,000.

Premier Senjuro Hayashi's announcement of the change of Japan's foreign policy, made on the occasion of the inauguration of his government in February of this year, was approved and acclaimed by the people as timely. He declared in no obscure terms that henceforth Japan's international attitude would turn from the passive defiance of the past to constructive cooperation. In this he was merely giving echo to the growing consensus of nation-wide opinion.

Japan today is beginning to be more international-minded than she has been, perhaps, since the World War. Is it an exaggeration to consider this matter of great significance in world politics? The European situation is grievously unsettled. In the Pacific area at least efforts should be made to insure peace and tranquillity. Undoubtedly, the change in Japan's outward policy will have an auspicious bearing upon it.

International-minded Japan is essential not only to the peace of the Pacific zone but also to its prosperity. Japan as a leading industrial power is a purchaser of tremendous amounts of products from the rest of the world as well as a supplier of useful manufactures at reasonable prices to all nations. With her ingenious workmanship and advanced technological equipments, Japan should be regarded as an indispensable factor of the world's economic structure.

The history of American-Japanese relations has been rendered interesting and often dramatic by frequent controversies. But underlying the superficial disturbances there has persisted a most reassuring mutual confidence which has prompted them to come to each other's help in distress.

Japan to this day cannot forget the good offices assumed by the late President Theodore Roosevelt in restoring peace after the Russo-Japanese War. The passing of time has not dimmed Japan's grateful memory of the magnanimity shown by the American people in organizing and dispatching far-reaching relief to Japan at the time of the 1923 earthquake. Public memories are short, but not in matters where the hearts of masses have been touched.

Economic Relations Happy

Furthermore, the economic relations between America and Japan are as happy in their fundamental fabric as can be hoped. The United States requires what Japan has in excess, as in silk, and Japan needs what America produces in superabundance, as in the case of cotton.

It has been this complementary character of the trade which fostered the assured lasting amity and good-will between business men of the two countries. Is there any wonder, then, that the recent revival of the international spirit in Japan found its expression first and foremost in a friendly attitude toward the neighbor across the Pacific?

When the Osaka Mainichi and the Tokyo Nichi Nichi, Japan's two great newspapers under one management, announced early this year the opening of a campaign for strengthening a friendly tie with the United States, the response by the people all over the country was at once enthusiastic and gratifying.

Encouraged by this atmosphere, the two newspapers took the further step of sending the present writer as their good-will envoy to America, there to hasten better mutual understanding between the two countries. The writer is happy to find that on this side of the Pacific there prevails as great an enthusiasm for better understanding and stronger friendship between the two nations as on the other side.

No Fort Across

for both countries from the military view-point. To prevent future battles, such as the many, big and little, which recently had taken place on the inland seas, Rush and Bagot agreed that lake armaments would be strictly limited.

Actually, they negotiated the first mutual naval limitations agreement in history, more than a century before the Washington Conference.

Under their agreement one vessel of not more than 100 tons armed with one eighteen-pounder cannon was permitted each on Lake Ontario, two similar craft on "the Upper Lakes or the Unsalted Seas," and one each on Lake Champlain. Such vessels were no more than revenue cutters, useless for military purposes.

The agreement further stated that land fortifications were to be discontinued, permitted to decay.

Today, there is not a modern fort along the entire frontier.

Only once was the Great Peace threatened. Northern feeling against England ran high during the days of the War Between the States. Canada was a sure refuge for Confederate agents. Some hotheads in the North wanted action, made faces across the border. The calm, cool common sense of Lincoln with his "one war at a time" policy prevented trouble.

Rebels

The one armed and hostile incursion from the United States into Canada since 1815 came in 1866. Five hundred members of the Fenian Irish Revolutionary Society crossed from Vermont and New York, defeated some Canadian militia, recrossed the frontier, saw their leaders arrested by United States officials.

In 1915, when American business men were training at Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood's Plattsburg camp, a regiment of them, under Regular officers, crossed the line by mistake near Rouse's Point, New York, met a Royal Canadian Mounted Policeman, apologized profusely, withdrew hastily.

Naval armaments on the Lakes now consist of Coast Guard patrol-vessels and obsolete craft assigned to units of the naval militia, which remain always within their respective territorial waters unless invited. They include the U. S. S. Wilmette, Paducah, Dubuque and Hawk, small gun-boats, and the U. S. S. C. 432, 412, 300 and 64, War-time submarine-chasers. They provide training for 400 officers and 2,900 men of the Naval Reserve.

Hand-Shake

A memorable ceremony, held in July, 1935, at the Rifle Range, near Toronto, illustrates the warm feeling between Canadian and American citizen-soldiers. Since 1921, officers of the 391st U. S. (Reserve) Infantry and the Irish Regiment of Canada had been holding rifle-matches, entertaining each other formally. The 391st is a Rochester unit, the Irish Regiment hails from Toronto, across Lake Ontario.

In 1935, Col. Thomas Remington of the Rochester regiment suggested presenting an American flag to the Canadian regiment. War Departments of both nations approved. So unheard-of was the action that no formation in the drill-books of either Army covered the necessary military ceremony. One had to be designed by American and Canadian officers.

An honor-guard of American officers escorted the color to the front of the paraded Irish Regiment and presented it to Lt.-Col. Sowden-Irwin. In accepting it, he promised in the name of his Regiment to cherish the Stars and Stripes second only to the national and regimental colors.

Rush and Bagot builded better than they knew.

Henderson Traces Price Rise

"You purchasing agents," he added, "know more about price fixing than any other single group in the country. When you note price increases by monopolies, do you yield your usual good judgment and cry 'Inflation'? Now, honestly, when you see raw material prices on the move upward, can you honestly say that these are due to the 'unbalanced budget,' when for years you have seen the wire-pulling which manipulates stocks and prices? As I have come to know purchasing agents, they would think a long time before they would utter a series of involuted phrasing to indicate that the gold policy was responsible for identical bids."

Present recovery, he said, has been substantial because of the repair which was made to purchasing power in the hands of the lowest income groups and the desirable balance between production and consumption which was attained.

"The price increase resurgence beginning last Fall," he said, "threatened this balance, and if it had not halted I would have exercised by prerogative to forecast a collapse. I reserve that right if the Fall witnesses a resumption which induces overbuying, overexpansion and speculation—but most of all, if it destroys the ability of consumers to buy."

Mr. Henderson spoke with misgivings of the retail prices gains of 5 to 7½ per cent which, he said, will probably take place before the end of the year. This price burden will present perplexities, he said, for consumers, including the 18,000,000 people who now derive most of their purchasing ability from the government.

Ralph E. Flanders, president of the Jones & Lamson Machine Company, Springfield, Vt., who represented industry in the discussion, said that, with conditions changing from day to day, it is extremely difficult to formulate a program for industry. We are half way on the road to recovery, he explained, but business is finding its faith and courage diminished by the aspect of the labor problem and uncertainty as to the future of business in the face of such factors as a persistently unbalanced Federal budget and the threat of inflation.

"We have recovered to a point somewhere between 72 and 82 per cent of the business activity of 1929," Mr. Flanders said, "but this has been done through funds borrowed by the Federal Government and thrown into the general pool of purchasing power, which is now 35 per cent greater than it was in the peak of 1929. But the pool is a comparatively stagnant one. Its velocity of circulation for business purposes is only 55 per cent of its 1929 activity and 75 per cent of the rate of turnover which was normal for the long period of good business in the late 'Twenties.'"

In an afternoon devoted to discussions of specific commodity markets, the delegates were told that the recent removal of the speculative element in the copper market has left the metal free to seek its natural levels both here and abroad. Albert E. Petermann, vice president of the Calumet & Hecla Consolidated Copper Company, said that competition from other metals and alloys as well as from cheaply produced foreign copper will act as an automatic brake against exorbitant prices here.

Yale Condemned

contained an allegation that Professor Davis was fostering a student demonstration in connection with a speech at Yale by Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota, which President Angell himself later withdrew, the report quotes this phrase from the letter:

"I must say that I think Jerome is becoming an increasing nuisance and my patience is inevitably wearing rather thin."

The president withdrew his charges before the final vote was taken, a week after the four test votes, but Dean Weigle did not propose a reconsideration of them, the report states.

TO HOLD A PERIODICAL RECITAL

The Tokyo Academy of Music will hold its periodical recital at the Hibiya Public Hall at 7 p.m. today under the direction of Mr. Klaus Pringsheim of the academy. This will be the last periodical concert of this season. The program features one single composition, Johann Sebastian Bach's Passion of St. Matthew, which is one of the greatest masterpieces of sacred music. After Bach's death in 1750, it had been completely forgotten, until it was restored from oblivion in 1829 through the great German composer Felix Mendelssohn, who directed the Passion's first performance at the Singakademie in Berlin. Since the Passion of St. Matthew has assumed its due place among the immortal creations of music.

Today's performance of the Passion of St. Matthew will be the work's first rendition in Japan. It is written for double chorus (i.e., two separate four part choruses), double orchestra, and five vocal soloists. In addition, the composer prescribed that an extra chorus should be used to reinforce the chorus in the opening and closing numbers of the work's first part. For the performance by the Tokyo Academy of Music, the Academy Chorus and Orchestra have been divided into two sections to make for first and second choruses and first and second orchestras; and the reinforcing chorus part will be sung by the large children's chorus of the Uyeno Musical Kindergarten, making together an imposing vehicle of nearly 500 voices. The soloists will be Mr. Tamotsu Kinoshita (Evangelist), Mr. Shinichi Takarai (Jesus), Miss Chieko Okuda (soprano solo), Miss Shizuko Saito (alto solo), and Mr. Goro Murao (bass solo).

Arms Work Eases

amounted to 1,014,454 tons, the highest quarterly total recorded since September, 1930.

In general, industrial wages for skilled workers vary between 46 and 66 shillings weekly. Little labor trouble is reported; there is no union at the dockyards; there are widespread complaints of a shortage of skilled mechanics, and yet workers park bicycles outside the factories, instead of automobiles, as in the United States.

Thousands in French War Work

In France the Brest naval dockyard employs from 3,000 to 4,000 men. The Renault establishment in the Paris area, which manufactures everything from automobiles, trucks, tanks and planes to railroad cars employs 35,000 persons. About 2,000 are on war planes. Renault can turn out about 150 to 200 automobiles daily, it is said, but only about two Bloch 210 bombers monthly. The Caudron plane factory, which does much experimental work, employs 500 persons, and the Bloch factory in Paris, recently nationalized, about 1,200.

In Italy 7,000 men work at La Spezia naval dockyard. Twelve hundred factories are producing war materials, and plane factories are working twenty-four hours daily. Fiat, which manufactures planes, tanks, trucks and other war material, and which in normal times employs about 15,000, now has from 60,000 to 80,000 men on its rolls.

About 136,000 Italian workmen wield pick, shovel and axe in newly conquered East Africa and 600,000 are employed in the Italian metallurgical industry, with a great part of their production devoted to war materials. About 225,000 are in the chemical industry.

In the shipbuilding industry, for instance, wages vary from about 5 cents hourly for girls and women to 16 cents hourly for skilled workers.

Krupp Employs 40,000 to 80,000

In Germany estimates of the number of men employed by Krupp vary between 40,000 and 80,000. Iron pre consumption has increased from 3,570,000 tons in 1933 to 9,630,000 in 1936 and bauxite consumption has increased almost 300 per cent. From 15,000 to 20,000 are employed in the shipbuilding industries in the Hamburg district, with the yards reported so crowded with domestic and foreign orders that they are unable to handle many more.

Skilled plane and automobile workers are said to receive 7 pfennigs hourly, from which, of course there are legal deductions, as in all German wages, that total about 16 per cent for Labor Front dues, winter relief and similar requirements.

Junkers employs about 12,000 in its plane works alone and about 8,000 in other subsidiaries. About 250,000 employed in 350 chemical establishments all over Germany receive, on the average, 33 marks 10 pfennings a week after deductions in their wages are made.

In highly industrialized Czechoslovakia, which supplies most of Central Europe and the Balkans with arms, about 38,000 men are employed in all the plants of Skoda, which, since last July, have been working seven days weekly and twenty-four hours daily. Skilled workmen get 200 to 300 kroner weekly and foremen 400 kroner.

The Ceska Slovenska plant at Brunn employs about 15,000 men making the famous Bren machine gun, which it is probably turning out now at the rate of about 15,000 yearly, making the Czech army the best machine-gun-equipped in Europe, but also selling thousands to other powers. The Letoy government plane factory in Prague has 1,200 persons on its rolls and is said to be capable, when in its stride, of producing one plane every two days.

Poland is less industrialized, but nevertheless she has been selling her PZL planes all over Europe and at the PZL factory at Okiece, just outside Warsaw, there probably are about 2,500 to 3,000 employes. Skilled workmen receive as much as 600 zlotys monthly.

In addition, Poland is creating a strategic industrial area in the Sandomierz district, where thousands eventually will be employed.

Are Congressmen

that congressmen got part of their compensation in glory. Membership in that body, he said, was "almost the greatest honor that could come to an American citizen."

Mr. Norris, however, took a practical view.

"Are we going to pay a man for lack of honor connected with his office by increasing his salary?" he demanded. After the average congressman had gone through an election campaign, he added, there did not seem much glory left. Mr. Fechner did not have to endure that.

Federal salaries were cited by friends of Mr. Fechner to show he was not overpaid:

Chairman and members of the Maritime Commission, $12,000.

Controller of Currency, $15,000.

WPA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, $12,000.

Col. H. B. Hackett, assistant administrator, PWA, $12,000.

Gen. Frank T. Hines, veterans' administrator, $12,000.

Interstate commerce commissioners, $12,000.

Tariff commissioners, $11,000.

General counsel, RFC, $12,500.

Manager, Alaskan railroad, $15,000.

Are They Underpaid?

Opponents of the Mr. Fechner $12,000 salary countered with the following list:

Chief of staff, United States Army, $8,000.

Chief of naval operations, United States Navy, $8000.

United States solicitor general, $10,000.

Chairman, RFC, $10,000.

Social Security Board members, $10,000.

Administrator, REA, $10,000.

Though not cited by either side, it is pointed out that Supreme Court members receive $20,000 annually. The chief justice gets $20,500.

Bennett C. Clark (D) of Missouri, an opponent of President Roosevelt's court plan, who introduced the amendment and led the fight to cut Mr. Fechner's salary, recalled that Mr. Fechner had advocated the judiciary program in public speeches. The vote to cut the salary which was ultimately taken was in part a mark of displeasure at these speeches.

Lenin's Sister Given Huge State Funeral

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

MOSCOW, June 14.—Soviet Russia today paid tribute to Madame Maria Lluinichna Allanova, 59-year old sister of Nikolai Lenin, who died last Saturday. The sister of the founder of the Soviet Republic was today given a huge state funeral which was attended by the highest leaders of the land including Dictator Josef Stalin.

Last night, as her body lay in state in the Trade Union House, thousands upon thousands filed past the bier to pay final tribute. After impressive ceremonies today, the ashes were immured in the wall of the Kremlin along with other deceased leaders of Soviet Russia.

Roosevelt Backs Export

Eckener had supplied concerning operations of the Graf Zeppelin on the run from Frankfort to Rio de Janeiro. These showed a loss of 10,000 reichmark on each trip, despite capacity loads. By substituting helium for hydrogen the airship would lose 8 per cent of its gross lifting power, the witness added, which would amount to about 37,000 pounds or virtually the entire pay load the ship can carry.

In answer to questions whether he doubted the sincerity of Dr. Eckener in asking for helium on humanitarian grounds, for commercial use, Mr. Slate replied that he regarded Dr. Eckener as the greatest living authority on airships and liked him, as did every one else in the industry, leaving the intimation that the dirigible expert might not be aware of the warlike plans attributed to the "German Government."

The subcommittee also heard Richard C. Horne Jr., an associate of Mr. Slate in the All-American Airways, describe Mr. Slate as the inventor of "dry ice" and of a variable pitch propeller for airplanes in 1916. Asked about the alleged military designs of Germany, Mr. Horne said: "I don't think Dr. Eckener has anything to do with military operations in Germany."

Lowest Wheat

000 acres. Russian and Chinese totals are omitted, because of inability to procure useful figures.

The world carry-over of wheat is similarly reduced to American totals. The totals of the three principal exporting countries is estimated at 239,000,000 bushels compared with 347,000,000 bushels in 1936 and 456,000,000 bushels in 1935 and 534,000,000 bushels in 1934.

Prices and Crop Prospects

Prices, therefore, are largely dependent upon crop prospects. With the carry-over little influencing the market, prices sensitively reflect changes in estimates.

And crop estimates in the United States are going upward. The condition of winter wheat as of May 1 indicated a production of about 654,300,000 bushels compared with the forecast of 456,000,000 bushels a month earlier. The prospective crop is 26 per cent above the small production of 519,000,000 bushels last year. Acres remaining for harvest after abandonment of acreage seeded last fall amounts to 47,400,000 acres, compared with 37,600,000 acres harvested in 1936, and the five-year average of 39,700,000 acres. Since May 1 rainfall has continued below normal in most areas, threatening these estimates.

Such is the present picture of one of American farmers' two major crops. It is a background against which farm sentiment for the pending drastic farm bill can be estimated. If wheat production rises greatly, if prices fall, sentiment for a sweeping farm bill is likely to be great. If good prices continue, sentiment wanes.

Blum's Way

their vagueness, unjust advantages.

To that specific grievance against the government for letting such things happen must be added the fact that liberty and power are heady stuff, and the ease of last year's success has begun to bear harvest. What is evident, and must be evident to the Premier as much as to others, is that the working classes are by no means immune to the human weaknesses with which they reproach "the rich"—being greedy and selfish and always wanting more.

In these past months they have developed a somewhat exaggerated sense of their power. Unfortunately, perhaps, their leaders have become in a sense delegates of the government—or at least act as such. On the Right it is the common reproach against Leon Blum that he can do nothing without the consent of the other Leon—Jouhaux, the general secretary of the Labor Federation. And there are hundreds of little Jouhauxs—without his experience and without his moderation. They have been very busy in these last months starting new demands, trying to persuade the workers that what they have obtained so easily is not all that is due them, stirring them to new discontent and, of course, always stimulating them with that mirage of the ideal state of Soviet Russia where the worker is currently reported to be king.

Within the ranks of his own party the Premier has, with the aid of Paul Faure and others, managed to restore discipline to some extent. But he has not succeeded in imposing his authority over the trades unions and the workers to anything like the extent which his friends would like to see. No one living here and having to do with the trades unions and employes can escape the feeling that the time has come for something more than cajorley—for some firmness, for some bullying—and it is on his capacity to alter his tactics—to alter his nature even—that Blum's further success depends.

For if this dual authority—of the workers' representatives taking it on themselves to see to it that the forty-hour and other laws are imposed, and of the government, through the police, having to stand on duty to see that the trades unionists in turn keep the law—is allowed to continue it can result only in a weakening of constitutional authority.

Nothing can take from the Premier the credit of having done in this past year an enormous service to the French worker. He has handled an extremely difficult situation with the greatest skill. But there one comes back again to the old problem of whether the French react best when governed roughly or gently, whether they should be dragooned or cajoled. In the past year cajolery has proved most effective but it is significant that the tide of opinion seems to be turning in favor of some bullying. And it is not likely that M. Blum will prove to be the man to do it.

First Rayon Firm Owned By Chinese Is Given Charter

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

SHANGHAI, June 18—A tangible indication of the dominant volt-face of Nanking's industrial policies is claimed following revelation that charter has today been granted by the National Government for the establishment of the first rayon industrial enterprise in China by an exclusive capitalization of Chinese interests.

Political significance is also attached to the novel industrial adventure in China in that the plans are believed to have been inspired to forestall any further advance on China's rayon industries of Japanese interests. It is revealed in this connection that it was quite recent that the Chinese authorities rejected several applications by Japanese interests for inauguration of rayon enterprises in China.

To Have Monopoly

The new Chinese enterprise which was sanctioned by the National Government today, will be known as "the Hua Tung Rayon Yarn Manufacturing Company," it is also revealed, and will be empowered to monopolize similar industries in the district of Shanghai and Chekiang Province.

Plans for the establishment of the new concern is reported to have been prompted by Mr. T. V. Soong, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Bank of China and the leading spirit of the National Economic Council.

Much importance is attached to the fact that the projected capitalization at $6,000,000 will be undertaken exclusively under the auspices of Chinese capital. The chief agents to subscribe the few capitalization will include the silk textile manufacturers and other financial groups of Chekiang.

Raw materials for the new enterprise will be imported from Norway, it is also learned, while machines and technical assistance will be sought from Frand and Italy. Negotiations with French and Italian authorities are understood to have been conducted by Mr. Kuo Ping-wen, chief of the foreign trade bureau of the Industry Ministry, who is accompanying Dr. H. H. Kung, Finance Minister, in the latter's present tour in Europe. Although definite results of the reported negotiations in Europe will not be known until the return of the Chinese economic mission, the belief is expected that contracts for the supply of raw materials will be concluded with the European industrial Powers.

To Open More Plants

Following up the organization of the Hua Tung Company, moves are stated to be afoot in various Chinese industrial quarters for the establishment of new rayon industrial firms.

Meanwhile, the National Government is stated to have rejected recently the application of a certain Japanese business concern for the inauguration of a rayon manufacturing plant at Wushih in Kiangsu. The abortive plans are stated to have been followed by another failure of a group of Japanese and Chinese enterprisers for a Sino-Japanese joint enterprise of rayon. manufacturing. This latter project is said to have negotiated between the Finance Minister, Dr. H. H. Kung, and Japanese interests, but met with a strong opposition by Mr. T. V. Soong, the project also proved abortive.

U.S.-Canadian Pact Seen Cause Of Trade Jump

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, May 28—The State Department here today reported on the first full calendar year of operation of the Canadian-American trade agreement—the most important single agreement yet concluded in the Hull program—making available the following facts:

"During the calendar year 1936 the United States increased its purchases of Canadian goods by $91,464,000. The total of such purchases was $286,112,000 in 1935 and $377,576,000 in 1936.

"Canada increased its purchases of American goods in the first trade agreement years by $60,697,000. The total of such purchases was $308,157,000 in 1935 and $368,854,000 in 1936."

Rise Laid to Pact

Part of this increase was due to general improvement in business and in world trade. Increased sales took place on both sides in goods not affected by the agreement as well as in those which were. However, in both cases the advance was proportionately greater in goods which were admitted more freely by both nations. Canadian purchases of United States goods increased 30 per cent in the categories affected by the agreement and only 11 per cent in other categories. United States purchases are said by the report to be greater in the corresponding affected categories, but the percentage is not given.

The tangible effect of the agreement is more strikingly revealed by the fact that while total United States imports from all other countries of the world advanced 17 per cent in 1936 over 1935, United States imports from Canada advanced 32 per cent. Canadian imports from all countries but the United States advanced 12 per cent, while purchases from the United States went up 18 per cent. Thus the agreement apparently produced an increase in the exchange of goods between the two countries greater than would have occurred without it.

The Canadian gain is proportionately larger than the American. The net balance of trade between the two countries was in favor of Canada for 1936 by a margin of $8,722,000. In all recent previous years it has been in favor of the United States. The United States advantage was $12,526,000 in 1933; $59,280,000 in 1934 and $22,045,000 in 1935.

Drought as Factor

The summary made public by the State Department along with the figures on trade attributed the big jump in United States purchases form Canada partly to the 1936 drought as well to the trade agreement and generally improved business conditions. In other words, it implies that part of the improvement is abnormal and therefore does not necessarily mean that the United States has permanently lost a favorable balance of trade with Canada.

However, this change in the trade relations of the two countries to a Canadian advantage is important in view of the efforts Canada's Prime Minister, William Mackenzie-King, is reportedly making in London to bring about a triangular trade arrangement including the United States, Britain and Canada. The theory as explained in Ottawa dispatches is that the United States should grant even further trade concessions to Canada in return for new openings in the English market for American goods.

Say "No More Concessions"

Trade agreement experts here in Washington are extremely interested in achieving an Anglo-American trade agreement, but have not been very friendly to the suggestion that even more concessions to Canada be an unofficial feature of the arrangement. These experts do not consider that an unfavorable trade balance with Canada is in itself necessarily an undesirable thing. But they do recognize that it will almost certainly raise a political obstacle to any more concessions to Canada. Aside from the political aspect, it is felt that very generous terms have already been granted Canada and that there is no immediate justification for any changes more to Canada's advantage.

The commodities in which U. S. purchases from Canada showed the most noticeablo gains, and the amounts of gain, were as follows:

Commodities:	Inc. in 1936 over 1935
Whisky	$14,280,000
Cattle weighing over 700 pounds	3,623,000
Softwood lumber	3,611,000
Horses	1,417,000
Cheddar cheese	1,364,000
Maple sugar	700,000
Seed potatoes	638,000
Salt water fish	603,000

Canadian purchases from the United States which increased most notably, and the amount of the increase, were as follows:

Commodities:	Increase in 1936 purchases over 1935 (in Canadian dollars)
Heavy machinery	6,830,000
Automobiles and parts	3,331,000
Fruits	1,586,000
Newspapers and periodicals	1,412,000
Fresh vegetables	882,000

No Help for It

JAPANESE CONVERSATION GRAMMAR

By Mr. Oreste Vaccari and Mrs. Enko Vaccari

Comment by A. B. JAMIESON, M.Sc.
Mollison Scholar in Japanese (1933) of the UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE

From the Japan Chronicle, June 6th

THE study of a language belonging to a group different from that to which the student's own belongs is undeniably difficult and this difficulty is rendered so much the greater if the students can find no suitable books for satisfactory study.

This was the complaint of many a student of Japanese, until the publication some months ago of Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari's grammar made available to present and intending students a new way of approach to the language. The English student of a major European language has at his disposal an excellent and bewildering array of grammars and aids, but of the few books that have been available for the study of Japanese some were unfortunately out of date and the others incomplete. The consequence has been that only those gifted with exceptional linguistic ability or with rare patience could arrive at a mastery of the language. Now, however, and thanks to the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari, the foreign student of Japanese finds his task greatly facilitated and he may even find this task to have become a pleasure.

The reception indeed which Mr. and Mrs. Vaccari's grammar has received in these few months is an eloquent testimony to the gap which it has filled and is a confirmation of the predictions made by Count Ayske Kabayama, the chairman of the Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai (The Society for International Cultural Relations) in his preface to the work.

Beginning at the beginning with a clear description of how to write the "kana" characters, the book takes the student imperceptibly on into the intricacies of the language, never rushing or forcing him and never discouraging him with too much undiluted theory. In the fact the rules appear only as natural and practical deductions from the aptly chosen examples which follow them, while somewhere among these examples the persevering student will find all those little worrying phrases that we have all of us at one time or another wondered just how to put correctly into Japanese.

There are two special chapters explaining the polite and familiar forms of speech, and another on the use of the all important honorifics. Though natural emphasis is laid on the conversational style, yet various styles of speech and writing are treated, and even the modern newspaper style is briefly explained.

For the first time definite well-illustrated rules have been given for the proper use of the different Japanese forms of the subjunctive and conditional which have been up till now real stumbling blocks in a language which makes particularly frequent use of such forms. Indeed the verb on the whole is treated in this work with great (and deserving) thoroughness. Worthy of mention too, are the authors' efforts in establishing definite rules showing how to accent Japanese words. No other book in English has treated this subject which is of considerable importance, for despite some assertions made in the past, accent in Japanese cannot be neglected if one wishes to speak the language properly.

But what perhaps strikes the mind of the student most forcibly upon examination of even a few pages of the grammar is the new idea of the authors of putting all illustrative examples and translation exercises at the same time in Chinese-Japanese characters and in Roman letters along with the English translation.

This is in no way a hindrance to the student who wants only a practical colloquial knowledge of the language, while for the advanced student who can read, or hopes to read the characters it enhances greatly the value of the book.

Especially important in a grammar is the index. The authors here have lived up to the high standard maintained throughout and have thoughtfully provided too, very complete indexes, one for English grammatical words and phrases and another for Japanese words to facilitate those who may want to use the volume as a reference book. There would seem thus little to prevent the grammar in its two volumes from taking a high place as a standard work of reference, while it appears to have already begun to supply the need for a complete treatment of Japanese, on the part of students of the most diverse aims.

Quezon Unruffled

troversial situation that has its roots in the administration of former High Commissioner Frank Murphy.

Whether the High Commissioner outranks the Commonwealth President has never been clearly defined, despite several attempts by the War, State and Navy Department to make it clear that President Roosevelt's representative is the ranking official in the Philippines.

Coincident with Mr. Quezon's arrival in New York, Mr. McNutt made public the now famous letter to Manila consuls, dated May 5, concerning the order in which toasts must be offered. It reads:

"His Excellency the United States High Commissioner understands there is some confusion on the proper precedence to be observed in proposing toasts on formal occasions. I, therefore, have the honor to advise you that he, as the direct representative of the President of the United States, is the ranking official in the Philippines.

"This being the case, where official functions are held at which toasts are proposed the proper procedure is to propose them in the following order:

"First, the head of the sovereign State in whose honor the function is held; followed by the proper national anthem; second, the President of the United States, followed by the United States national anthem; third, if it is desired to propose further toasts, the United States High Commissioner, followed by the United States national anthem, and, fourth, the President of the Commonwealth, followed by the Philippine national anthem. If no band or orchestra is available the national anthem may be omitted."

Madrid Food Crisis Is Easing Steadily

By HERBERT L. MATTHEWS

N. Y. Times

MADRID, May 26.—The United States Embassy today received 880 pounds of beans, lentils, rice and sugar from Valencia. The food came in the nick of time, for the reserves at the Embassy were exhausted and the American refugees were particularly pleased that the Valencia staff and the State Department in Washington at last had permitted a positive move to help them.

This food is being paid for by the refugees here and it was sent in a truck belonging to the Norwegian legation, the arrangements being made by Walter Thurston, American Charge d'Affaires at Valencia. After making futile efforts to get the State Department's permission for the food to be sent from Valencia through the American naval stores and the British and French Embassies, the refugees hit on the idea of having staples purchased for them in Valencia with their own money, and Francisco Ugarte, custodian, made the request about ten days ago.

Now the American colony knows at least that it is not going to starve and that the State Department will not obstruct its efforts to keep itself going here as best as it can.

As a matter of fact, Spring fruit is coming in—apricots, peaches, strawberries, cherries and grapefruit—and Frank L. Cannaday is able to buy such things at least. However, what he could not get were necessary staples.

Population to Eat Better

The Madrid population is also going to eat better on the whole. Aside from the fruit supply, the arrangements made by the new municipal government are resulting in slow but steady improvement. Already the number and length of those distressing food queues have been reduced and it would appear as if the worst were over. Madrid never has been in danger of actual starvation, but it was a Winter of great privations for all in the capital.

There is one group of from 3,000 to 4,000 men for whom the food situation is very difficult indeed—the Insurgents in University City. They are being fed still, but under devious and dangerous conditions. The writer went to University City this morning going all the way from Puerta de Hierro to the Hall of Philosophy and Letters and back in an effort to get an idea of the true situation there. I had hopes that by climbing to the top floor of that building which is less than 500 yards from the Clinical Hospital and Casa Velasquez held by the Insurgents, it would be possible to get an idea of the present communications and perhaps even see the pontoon bridge which the Rebels have across the Manzanares.

As a matter of fact, that part of the river at all times is hidden by a dip of the ground. I was told by all the officers I met that the only place from which the bridge could be seen was from a machine gun post north of Franceses Bridge which in turn could not be reached during the day without drawing heavy fire.

Cannot Cross During the Day

However, by questioning a number of officers I got a good idea of the true situation, particularly as I could see much of the ground involved. During the day the Rebels cannot cross into University City at all. In the dark they can manage but with great difficulty, for their flimsy wooden bridge is constantly swept by machine gun fire. As a result they have resorted to wading across with water waist high. Sometimes they use mules, but that makes noise and draws too much fire.

In other respects the situation in University City is unchanged. It is still the most fantastic front ever imagined.

The lines zigzag so that in rounding one corner a bullet will come whistling from the right while 100 yards further another will whine past your head from the left. As the trenches were not dug for six-footers it is almost impossible not to draw a certain amount of fire.

The Philosophy Building is under fire from nearly all sectors so that the angle of fire is about 120 degrees. Walking down one corridor you are liable to be shot at from Casa Velasquez, while after turning a right angle you find yourself in line of view of the Casa de Labor.

USSR Building Up Vast War Machine

By HANSON W. BALDWIN

N. Y. Times

MOSCOW, May 16 (Deferred).—Russia's program for strengthening her national defense includes modernization of her airfleet, construction of more submarines and other naval vessels and improvement of her transportation facilities, it was learned today.

With an army of 1,300,000 (the bulk of it concentrated behind field fortifications along the frontiers), an estimated 5,000 tanks and the world's largest air force, the Soviet Union is already a powerful military nation, but because of the threat of Japan in the East and Germany in the West, the process of building up the army, navy and air force is expected to continue with increased energy this year and in succeeding years.

The Soviet's acknowledged budget estimate for direct military expenditures in 1937 is 20,102,000,000 rubles, almost a 36 per cent increase over 1936. Such direct expenses will cost the average proletarian family in Red Russia 587 rubles and represents about one-fifth of the total budget. If indirect military expenditures are included, the defense costs are much more.

Almost all of this vast country of 170,000,000 people is geared to the war machine, since the government is convinced that sooner or later a capitalistic attack will challenge Communist political philosophy. The army—which includes under the unified command of Marshal Klementy E. Voroshiloff, the Defense Commissar, the air force and the fleet—is the most powerful influence in Russia next to Joseph Stalin and the Communist party.

But it is evident that there are some weaknesses, and in particular it seems likely from available estimates that the strength of the air force has been exaggerated. No accurate military statistics of any sort are available in this land where secrecy and considerable tension rule, but it is thought that the number of first-line combat planes in operating squadrons—that is, planes that could fight tomorrow if war were declared—is between 2,500 and 3,500, with somewhat fewer than 3,000 probably the best estimate.

Planes Total About 4,500

In addition to these first-line machines, however, Russia probably has 1,500 to 2,000 others, including training planes and a few reserves, giving her a total plane strength of about 4,500. Her aviation personnel of some 50,000 men, including about 7,000 or 8,000 pilots, is "extremely effective and well organized," as one expert put it, but is only reasonably well equipped, despite the recent startling successes of Russian planes in Spain.

Probably one-third of Russia's first-line strength is in bombers, most of which are old four-engined T. B. 3s, which can carry two tons of bombs about 1,250 miles but are very slow. Some of them perhaps are capable of 160 miles an hour; most of them do considerably less. Of the various modifications of this type, which first came out in 1931, the latest is the T. B. 6, which, with a retractable undercarriage and many other changes, is probably nearly 100 miles an hour faster than its predecessors.

Russia owes much to United States aviation and formerly owed much to German aviation. Most of her best models to date are frankly imitative. Her medium bomber, which is now being produced in quantity, is a Russian version of an American twin-engined all-metal model and is powered by American Wright Cyclone engines, now built in Russia under license as M 25s. This bomber, known as the S. B., is the type that performed so brilliantly in Spain, but as far as is known, the Soviet has only about 100 of these ships, and even though they have a speed of about 240 miles an hour, they are beginning to be outmoded already by later American and other machines.

One of Russia's best fighters—the I 16, the snub-nosed ship that was the terror of Spanish skies—is almost wholly foreign, not in construction but in design. It is close copy of the United States Boeing fighter, but is powered with the French Gnome-Rhone engine or the Wright Cyclone, which gives it a speed said to be as high as 280 miles an hour.

Russia probably has about 600 or 700 pursuit ships or fighters of all types, some of them old I 5 sesquiplanes and I 7s (German Heinkels). Other types include the I 15, powered by Wright Cyclones and having a speed of about 220 miles an hour. The latest type, not yet in full production, is the I 17 monoplane, which is believed to be powered with a Hispano engine and is said to be capable of a top speed of more than 300 miles an hour.

Most of the rest of the machines are reconnaissance or general purpose craft, of which Russia must have at least 1,000, most of them obsolete or obsolescent.

No accurate idea of Russian plane production is available, but it is known the Soviet is replacing the T. B. 3s and the old fighters as rapidly as possible with newer machines. A contract recently has been signed that will permit the construction of a military model of the United States Vultee plane in Russia.

Record Baseball Attendance

For 46 consecutive years, Edson S. Brewster, veteran Western Union baseball telegrapher, has covered the major league baseball games in New York City, with his eyes glued to the diamond from start to finish of every game, pounding out his wire reports of each game play-by-play, which is relayed to newspapers all over the country. At the end of last season, Mr. Brewster had reported 6,314 games—the greatest baseball attendance record in the world. Today he is reporting his 6,315th game and starting his 47th year of baseball reporting.

Morgenthau Urges Action To Check Tax Evasion

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

WASHINGTON, June 17 — The urgent necessity of closing all loopholes in the existing tax laws in order to put an end to all kinds of practices of tax evasion was voiced by Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr. before the joint Congressional inquiry committee on tax evasion. He pointed out that if tax evasion is stopped completely, it would bring millions of dollars more to the Treasury Department.

He said that these loopholes have been developed by a group of ingenious lawyers and accountants of the United States, who make their living by showing people who can afford to employ them method by which the least possible taxes can be paid, thus creating belief that richmen have no taxes to pay.

The Secretary of the Treasury failed to name any tax-dodgers but officials stated that a list of tax evaders would be submitted to the committee soon.

Bandits Rounded-up

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

HARBIN, June 18—A total of 90 bandits were killed and one other was made prisoner as the result of a vigorous engagement jointly waged by Japanese and Manchoukuoan punitive troops near Chihliushan, in Pinchiang Province, last Tuesday, reports reaching here today state. Many rifles and other sorts of ammunition are also reported to have been confiscated following the fighting.

According to the reports, a Manchoukuo cavalry unit reinforced by a squad of Japanese punitive forces encountered a horde of over 200 marauders in the mountainous district about noon Tuesday. A severe figting ensued which lasted eight hours. Inflicting a crushing defeat on the outlaws, the Japanese-Manchoukuoan joint forces finally virtually destroyed one of the most powerful groups of bandits in the district.

Carbon Monoxide Held An Air Peril

By JAMES C. EDGERTON

N. Y. Times

Carbon monoxide is the product of the imperfect combustion of carboniferous materials in internal-combustion engines. It is a colorless gas and in average concentrations is also odorless. In larger concentrations, where it is extremely dangerous, it has a slight garlic-like odor.

Present in the exhaust gases of aviation engines in a ratio of from 2 to 7 per cent of the total output, its greatest incidence occurs with large throttle openings and rich mixtures. Engine breathers may also be a source of contamination, particularly where there are worn rings and distorted cylinder walls. There have been carbon-monoxide readings of as high as 2 per cent from this source.

The inhaled air may be contaminated by carbon monoxide in several ways. In single-engine aircraft, which are particularly prone to this type of poisoning, there may be seepage through the fire wall or through the fuselage openings. The engine exhaust may contaminate the slip stream and be directly fed into the cockpit. Turbulence may produce the same effect in the case of multi-engined airplanes where the ventilation input is poorly located. Another prevalent source of trouble is a poorly designed heating system which depends upon circulation of exhaust gases about heating members. Hot-water heaters eliminate this source of difficulty.

Found by Air Corps

It is particularly significant that the Army Air Corps, in examining single-engine aircraft, found carbon monoxide in the amount of 0.026 per cent where the power plant was a radial-cooled engine with short stacks and no collector rings. Their average on many runs was 0.0123 per cent, an amount dangerous to piloting efficiency.

Carbon monoxide gas in itself is not harmful nor toxic. It is dangerous due to the fact that it produces oxygen starvation. Gradual starvation has been found to be more dangerous than sudden saturations by much large quantities.

Carbon monoxide poisoning is a serious matter at sea level. The medical profession claims that thousands of person are daily affected to some degree by this gas. Serious, even fatal, poisoning is common. It is much more dangerous, however, in aviation. As higher altitudes are reached, the atmospheric pressure, as is well known, decreases in proportion.

As Altitude Goes Up

At approximately 10,800 feet the pressure is two-thirds that of sea level. At about 17,400 feet the pressure is only one-half. The direct result is that the body experiences difficulty in obtaining an adequate supply of oxygen. If to this difficulty is added the oxygen deprivation caused by carbon monoxide poisoning, it is obvious that the situation is far more serious.

Six parts of carbon monoxide in 10,000 can produce coma in two hours. The Air Corps, on the basis of extensive research, has set 0.005 per cent of carbon monoxide as the maximum permissible amount in the inspired air. Of course, it is desirable to eliminate every possible trace of this gas, but due to practical difficulties the bureau is inclined to believe that a permissible limit at sea level should not be higher than 0.01 per cent.

The detection of carbon monoxide gas can be divided into two fields. First and most important of these, due to the fact that it is designed for preventive purposes, is the carbon monoxide indicator which utilizes the so-called hopcalite cell principles, this substance simply being a catalyst for carbon monoxide.

Blood-Stream Tests

The second field of carbon monoxide detection depends upon sampling the blood of an individual suspected of having been subjected to carbon monoxide poisoning. This device is the so-called pyrotannic detector. This process can be used for living pilots who exhibit suspicious symptoms, or after death, with equal facility.

The most significant symptom of mild carbon monoxide poisoning is a feeling of tightness across the forehead, usually accompanied by a slight headache. As the danger line is approached there is a decided loss of muscular power, vomiting, convulsions and coma. At this stage the pulse gradually weakens and the respiratory rate slows until there is a complete respiratory failure and death.

The bureau recommends to the aviation industry that bureau inspections for carbon monoxide be supplemented by inspections at frequent intervals conducted by manufacturers and operating companies. It is strongly recommended that the importance of this subject be immediately recognized by the industry.

Shanghai Foreign Trade Has Good Gains In Quarter

Christian Science Monitor

SHANGHAI—Complete figures for the foreign trade of Shanghai during the month of March of this year show a large increase in imports as compared with the month of February and an even larger decrease in exports compared with the month before. Compared with March, 1936, all-round progress is noted.

The first three months of the year as compared with the first quarter of 1936, show an increase of 36.5 per cent in the total value of the trade, this being represented by an increase of 31.9 per cent in imports and of 43.1 per cent in exports.

The trade figures compare:

	March, 1937	February, 1937	March, 1936
Imports	$68,197,542	$52,871,733	$48,236,299
	34,466,483	51,279,634	27,278,134
Total	$102,864,025	$104,151,367	$75,514,134
Excess of imports	$33,731,059	1,592,099	20,958,165

	Jan.-March, 1937	Jan.-March, 1936
Imports	$164,646,541	$124,766,137
Exports	125,181,536	87,422,654
Total	$289,828,077	$212,188,791
Excess of import	$39,465,005	$37,343,483

Export Trade Better

The general export trade is much better than it has been for the past two years, and with Government help, exports as a whole are likely to increase steadily.

The increase of over $15,000,000 in imports was due to considerably larger buying of practically every class of commodity, and is considered proof of the growing purchasing power of the people. Fully 15 per cent of this increase was due to the importation of miscellaneous sundries, which chiefly comprised requirements for the Army and Navy and another 15 per cent represented increase in imports of cereals and flour, principally wheat from Australia.

United States and Germany were the principal suppliers of miscellaneous sundries, Great Britain coming next in imports and Belgium fourth, at less than half of the British imports.

Japan is easily the chief gainer through the increase in the imports of metals and ores, her trade in these commodities advancing by no less than $2,250,000. The increase in supplies from America has amounted to well over $1,500,000. Belgium's trade has advanced by approximately $1,200,000 and that of Germany and Great Britain by about $700,000 each.

Larger Wool Imports

Great Britain, Japan, and to a lesser extent Australia and Austria have derived the main benefit from the larger purchases of wool and wool manufactures by Shanghai. Sales by Great Britain have increased by roughly $3,300,000 and those of Japan by $1,500,000. Japan predominates in the supply of manufactured woolen articles.

Japan, Great Britain, Germany and America, in that order, were the principal suppliers of machinery and tools to Shanghai during the first quarter of 1936. Japan more than held her own, doubling her sales. Trade with Great Britain, Germany and America has increased, but not to the same extent.

Germany takes the lead in the supply of books, maps and paper but in this business also Japan is making considerable progress.

The imports, in gold units, during the first quarter of the current year and in the corresponding period of 1936 were:

(In gold units)	Jan.-Mar. 1936	Jan.-Mar. 1937
From Germany	1,105,569	1,178,145
From America	657,758	666,705
From Canada	567,938	581,650
From Japan	351,541	531,245
From Great Britain	255,944	554,901
From Sweden	212,837	407,243
From Norway	181,061	343,920

Where Hitler Dreams

Austrian official, Hitler has always held official drudgery in abhorrence; he regards it as death to really creative work. Though he recognizes a bureaucracy as a necessary evil of administration, he still warns party leaders not to get lost in deadly paper work, but rather to keep in close touch with the people and the facts of life.

At any rate, that is the rule Hitler has adopted for himself. He has been a great improvisator, and that his improvisation is not without merit is proved by his spectacular career. But these improvisations were born not out of burning the midnight oil over long official reports but rather out of visits to all parts of the country and talks with many kinds of people and, above all, out of protracted discussions and exchanges of opinion in the intimate circle of his old cronies and collaborators, stretching at times into the small hours of the morning. For these discussions the Berghof is an ideal place.

The proverb, "It's the early bird that catches the worm," does not apply to Hitler. He rarely rises before 9 o'clock in the morning, and sometimes even later, except when he is on tour. During breakfast, which usually consists of milk, bread, oatmeal, honey and cheese, he reads the newspapers, especially his own Voelkische Beobachter. Then he takes a walk in the mountains accompanied by some guests. He may visit Goering's chalet or stop at a mountain cafe, or he may simply stroll about, stopping at times to emphasize the ideas he may be expounding to his guests by drawing pictures in the sand with his stick. About 11 o'clock, however, he is usually at his desk, where his mail and the official business that have come up in the pouch from the Chancellery are already laid out by his adjutants, Wilhelm Brueckner and Julius Schaub, and his press chief, Dr. Otto Dietrich. These men are his steady companions, although, in important affairs, State Secretary Otto Meissner, Chief of the Presidential Chancellery, and State Secretary Hans Heinrich Lammers, head of the Reich Chancellery, are also on hand.

As a rule official business is out of the way by lunch time. It is well known that Hitler is a vegetarian and does not drink or smoke. His lunch and dinner consist, therefore, for the most part, of soup, eggs, vegetables and mineral water, although he occasionally relishes a slice of ham and relieves the tediousness of his diet with such delicacies as caviar, luscious fruits and similar titbits. He is outspoken about having a sweet tooth and loves confectionery, especially chocolates. However, regular meals are served for guests. National Socialist coordination ends at the door of the dining room.

Unless other things intervene, the afternoon is usually devoted by Hitler to his favorite hobby—architecture. In his study, or special studio built at Berghof, he may be found almost any afternoon bent over architectural sketches with a pencil in his hand, changing, adding, correcting; or inspecting models of new buildings and other construction and expounding his views to his entourage and the original designers. Architecture is not his first love merely; architecture in the Third Reich means monumental buildings, and monumental buildings are to Hitler lasting symbols of great eopoh.

His evenings are usually spent around the fireplace in the big hall in the company of his guests. These may include artists from the opera, the stage and the films, especially musicians who may give a sample of their talent for the edification of the company. Most of the time, however, the evenings are devoted to informal discussion of problems of the day. In these chatty talks Hitler learns many things that would never find their way into official reports. Through them he extends the antennae of his intuition, gauges the atmosphere around him and measures the forces that he must take into account in making his decisions. These discussions are so much the rule at the Berghof that some believe that Hitler hates being alone. But there are other moods.

Even those who come with a certain reserve are captivated by the Fuehrer's complete naturalness in these surroundings. A Czech delegate of the Front Fighters' Congress, who admitted his initial skepticism, described his impressions of his visit to Hitler in his native Czech paper as follows:

"In his salon Hitler gave us the impression of an unaffected private gentleman. Before other statesmen of great name, the average person has a peculiar feeling of distance. With Hitler, it was otherwise. He sat among us. It seemed to me as if I had spent at least two years with him in the trenches. He repudiated the word 'dictator' for himself. The Germans, he said, had elected him with more than 90 per cent of the votes. He compared the life of nations with the life of a married couple. Agreement was necessary, he said, and difficulties had to be removed. War he insisted, was the last thing he would take on his conscience: it is terrible for the vanquished and the victors.

"I repeat, this statesman and head of the German nation did not seem stiff; his social manner was informal and, so to say, comradely. Ladies accompanying blind veterans had been informed beforehand that Hitler does not like paint and powder. In the salon was a piano and a bust of Wagner. Yes, Hitler loves music and plays the piano well. The artists are well taken care of by the Fuehrer."

Chile Successful In Disposing Of $75,000,000 Issue

Christian Science Monitor

SANTIAGO, Chile.—An unusual operation for South America has just been effected in Argentina with unusual success. That country, in response to an appeal by the Government, has subscribed 200,000,000 pesos (approximately $75,000,000) as part of a carefully prepared plan to repatriate dollar debts. The subscribed pesos can be converted into dollars, thanks to a doubled export balance in Argentina's favor, for the country is now admittedly in the full stride of economic prosperity.

Only half the required amount was first placed on the market, 100,000,000 pesos at 90.50 per cent, which yielded 4.42 per cent interest, but the fire of patriotism was in the campaign propaganda, and at the end of the second day metropolitan subscriptions alone had carried the figure to well over the required amount. The official sponsors thereupon decided to plump for the whole amount and this was attained when the provinces came in with their support.

Conditions Good

President Agustin Justo personally identified his Government with the appeal, and success was due as much to the politico-economic reasons he set forth in a radio broadcast as to the flourishing state of banking and business.

The subscription issue was under the wings of a strong national syndicate formed under the auspices of the Central Bank. It included practically all the banks and financial consortiums. The Buenos Aires and Rosario stock exchanges were also included. Confidence in the success of the operation was obvious from the beginning because of the large amount of available cash reported in expanding bank deposits.

In many ways the loan was a personal success for President Justo. Soon after he assumed power, back in the days of crisis, so far as there was an economic crisis in Argentina, he called on his compatriots to subscribe to a Patriotic Loan. They answered him and were rewarded with financial equilibrium.

Back salaries were paid, confidence injected into the banks and credits re-opened, with a surplus at the treasury. Drastic economy preceded another successful maneuver—conversion of the internal loans, which reduced the burdens of the taxpayer. Then the floating debt was reduced from one thousand to one hundred millions. Nothing succeeds like success, the President discovered, and he transferred conversion into the foreign field. Success was immediate in New York.

All this would not have been possible but for the economic recovery and rise both in volume and price of national exports.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE.

US Found Easing Isolation Policy

N. Y. Times

NEW YORK, May 31.—An increasing American interest in world affairs during 1936 and a continued departure from "the narrow isolationism of recent years" was seen by the Geneva Research Center in its annual report on the relationship of the United States to the League of Nations, republished yesterday by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

In a critical year in world affairs, the study said, "the United States followed a policy described by Secretary of State Hull as 'earnest, persistent, careful and cautious.' It combined, a relatively stable and continuous spirit of international cooperation with an occasional wide initiative indicating that the government was evolving from the narrow isolationism of previous years.

"While not a member of the principal agency of organized international cooperation (the League), the government, nevertheless, took a number of actions parallel to those of the League or initiated measures of its own contributing to the same general results, notably in the direction of neutrality in the Ethiopian conflict, negotiation of trade treaties, agreement with Britain and France on monetary matters and convocation of the Inter-American Conference.

Progress in Our Foreign Policy

"Thus, despite the general world situation, the inevitable dislocations of a Presidential campaign, and the isolationist policy unexpectedly adopted by the Republican party, the year was marked by a cautious progress in American foreign policy, with the initiation of certain new activities, the consolidation of others already established and the relinquishment of none.

"Many believe that the United States took during 1936 the most helpful action, either parallel or direct, that it has yet taken in connection with the League's general purposes. Its parallel steps in the Ethiopian affair corresponded with what the League was seeking to do; its initiative in the Anglo-Franco-American monetary accord was helpful to and was aided by the League's similar efforts; President Roosevelt's friendly reference to the League in his convocation of the Inter-American Conference was valuable in Europe as well as in the Americas.

"In addition, the Surgeon-General sat on the Health Committee; an Assistant Division Chief of the State Department on the Dangerous Drugs Committee and subsequent conference; an Assistant Bureau Chief from the Labor Department on the Social and Child Welfare Committee; and other representatives on the Council when it appointed the Opium Board, and on the Council Committee for Technical Cooperation with China.

Gave Data to Geneva

"The government also answered numerous circular inquiries from the League, transmitted to Geneva a great deal of statistical data, and continued formolly to register its treaties for publication in the League's Treaty Series.

"Thus, while no change was forecast in America's position of non-membership in the League, patricipation in specific activities was firmly grounded and relations between Geneva and Washington were cordial and cooperative."

American interest and active participation for the first full year in the International Labor Organization were seen as giving that organization a new impetus, while the only discouraging note was seen in the withdrawal of all governmental support from the Permanent Court of International Justice. Despite this lack of official support, due, the report said, to the defeat of the Court Protocols in the Senate in 1935, unofficial support continued active and Professor Manley O. Hudson was elected a justice of the court by the second largest majority ever cast, 48 votes of 53, on the first ballot.

Motorists' School For Safer Driving Opened In Toronto

Christian Science Monitor

TORONTO.—In an effort to reduce traffic accidents by instruction and systematic testing of motor equipment, and to make motorists safety conscious, the Toronto City Police Safety and Accident Prevention School was recently opened here by Chief of Police Draper. Classes to educate motorists in safe driving will be held on Thursday nights, at which lectures will be given on the rules of the road, highway courtesy, and how to dodge "the reckless pedestrian."

Under the present system, the police chief explained, motorists guilty of careless driving are ordered to report to the nearest station, where they are warned. A number of the worst offenders in this group, particularly repeaters, will be notified to attend this school, where the dangers of law violations, of which they have been guilty, will be stressed. Classes will also be held regularly for police and truck drivers, and it is hoped that organizations employing drivers will cooperate by having their employes attend. Reduction of accidents is primarily a matter for drivers themselves, the officer believes.

At this school they will not only see tests on new machines in the department, but they will try out a machine to see how quick their own reaction is when they see danger ahead.

25 Policemen Caught

ed to go home at 6:45 a.m. after they were stripped of shields and revolvers.

Officials were checking up to determine whether the detectives and plainclothesmen were really off duty at the time of the raid. All the uniformed patrolmen were found to be legitimately off duty.

Commissioner Valentine announced at a press conference that charges would be drawn against the men as soon as he received complete reports on the case. Meanwhile, all the men will remain under suspension.

The raid was unique in police annals. Under the Valentine regime scores of policemen have been dismissed for drunkenness, neglect of duty, insubordination and conduct prejudicial to the good order and discipline of the Police Department, but charges of widespread gambling rarely have been heard.

When Mayor F. H. LaGuardia was informed of the raid he asked: "Who caught them?"

"Other patrolmen," he was told.

"You can be assured that a complete investigation will be made by the Police Commissioner," he said.

The Suspended Policemen

Those suspended were:

Second Grade Detective—Robert Rehman, West Forty-seventh Street station.

Third Grade Detectives—Lawrence W. Dagger, 4th Division Radio Patrol; John R. O'Brien, White Plains Avenue station, the Bronx; Francis J. Sherry, Fifth Avenue Squad, and Joseph J. McGarry, Motor Vehicle Homicide Squad.

Patrolmen—Alexander F. Alcock and John J. Duffy, West Forty-seventh Street station; Anthony L. Broschard, David S. Dick and Edward S. Lavin, East Sixty-seventh Street station; Michael J. Konnelly, West Sixty-eighth Street station; William D. Clancy, East 104th Street station; Peter P. Byrne, Michael J. Rock and Nathaniel Carter, West 135th Street station; Russell J. T. Connor, Harry J. Padian, Edward Siberlust and Roosevelt Washington, West 135th Street station; Frank M. Taylor, Alexander Avenue station; James M. Cox, Joseph Katz, Harold King, Peter F. Sheridan and Harry Jentzen, 4th Division.

During suspension the men will receive no pay and will be required to report daily to their superior officer.

British Destroyer Checks Capture Of Refugee Ship

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

ST. JEAN DE LUZ, June 22.—A thrilling rescue at sea by the British destroyer Boadicea today prevented nationalist capture of an English steamer carrying 1,700 Spanish leftist refugees from Santander, northern seaport 45 miles west of Bilbao.

An armed nationalist steamer, the Ciudad de Palma, attempted to stop the English vessel on the high seas near here, but the latter immediately appealed to the Boadicea for protection. The destroyer rushed to the scene from nearby and escorted the English ship safely into St. Jean de Luz, French frontier port.

The rescued steamer, the Mary Moller of Newcastle, had set out from Santander for a French port carrying refugees who fled from the city in fear of an impending nationalist attack.

Child Labor Curb Signed By Lehman

N. Y. Times

ALBANY.—Governor Lehman signed on June 2 the bill of Assemblyman Moffat of New York barring the sale in this State of goods manufactured wholly or in part by the labor of children under 16 years of age.

In a memorandum the Governor said the main purpose of the new law was to supplement legislation which Congress might pass to regulate or prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of goods manufactured or produced with child labor. Three measures, the Connery, Barkley and the Wheeler-Johnson bills, are pending in Congress.

"If the Federal Government does enact a law which will require supplemental State legislation of the nature proposed by this bill," the Governor said, "New York should be ready to take advantage of such Federal legislation the moment it becomes effective."

The Moffatt bill was introduced in the Legislature immediately after defeat by the Assembly of ratification of the Federal Child Labor Amendment. It was sponsored in the Senate by Senator Nunan of Queens and passed both houses by an overwhelming vote.

Governor Opposed at First

When the measure made its appearance, Governor Lehman declared that he was opposed to the plan because he was convinced that it was unworkable and unenforceable. At a hearing which the Governor gave on the measure at the beginning of the thirty-day bill period, representatives of various churches urged approval of the measure while the State Federation of Labor demanded its veto.

Henry Root Stern of New York, former treasurer of the Republican State Committee, who aided in drafting the Moffatt bill, was its chief defender at the hearing before the Governor. He stressed the point that approval of the bill would eliminate New York State as a consumer of child-labor-made goods, regardless of any action by Congress.

Establishment of a temporary State commission to make a survey of the Hudson River valley and to recommend a comprehensive plan for the preservation of its natural beauty and development is provided in the bill of Senator Corning of Albany, approved by the Governor. The measure carries an appropriation of $15,000 and was recommended by the Governor in his annual message.

The Governor vetoed the bill of Senator Feld of New York which would have empowered the New York City Superintendent of Schools to determine the nature and scope of examinations.

He pointed out that he had approved another bill by Senator Feld increasing the size of the board of examiners from seven to eight and providing that one of the members should be the superintendent. In a letter to the Governor, urging the veto, Mayor La Guardia said that under the approved Feld bill "it should be assumed that his influence can remedy the situation of which complaint has been made."

Favors Board to Test Materials

Creation of a board of standards and appeals in the State Labor Department, to test, approve or disapprove materials, devices and apparatus, is provided in the bill of Senator Howard of Brooklyn, signed by the Governor. The measure carries an appropriation of $65,000.

The Governor vetoed another bill by Senator Howard fixing the annual salary of assistant supervisors of industrial inspection in the Labor Department at $3,250. He also vetoed a bill by Assembyman Steingut of Brooklyn giving bedding inspectors the same rights and benefits as to grades and salaries as are given to factory, mercantile and other inspectors.

"Apart from the merits of the demands of these employes for increased salaries, such matter should be dealt with by regular budgetary procedure," the Governor said.

The State Liquor Authority will have seven instead of five assistant chief executive officers, under the bill of Senator Crawford of Brooklyn, approved by the Governor.

The Governor signed the bill of Senator Twomey of Brooklyn, appropriating $170,000, to the tax department for expenses relative to the franchise tax on business corporations and the temporary emergency taxes on unincorporated business and personal net income.

Acting upon the recommendation of Commissioner Post of the New York City Tenement House Department, the Governor vetoed the bill of Assemblyman Stephens of Putnam, which would have amended the Multiple Dwellings Law in relation to omitting a yard for any buildings converted or altered.

Rejects Aviation Commission

The bill of Assemblyman Hillig of Sullivan, which would have created a permanent aviation commission in the Executive Department, was vetoed. The Governor said its principal duty seemed to be investigatory, which, he said, was the function of a temporary commission.

The Governor signed the bill of Senator Nunan of Queens appropriating $15,000 and creating a temporary State commission to cooperate with the Federal Constitutional Sesquicentennial Commission in celebration of the 150th anniversary of the formation of the Federal Constitution.

He also approved the bill of Senator Murray of New York amending the Multiple Dwellings Law by exempting from civil or criminal liability for tenement house violations any person acquiring property by foreclosure of mortgage for failure to comply with the law within six months.

Another vetoed bill, by Assemblyman Stephens of Putnam, would have created an authority for constructing a Hispanic-American center building in New York City.

The bill of Assemblyman Fitzpatrick of Queens, to amend the State Mental Hygiene Law to provide that heads of families must be allowed to live outside of the institution in which they are employes was vetoed.

Describes Feats Of Atom Smasher

N. Y. Times

CHICAGO.—Experiments in the smashing of atoms in which particles may be shot through a tube at a speed of 100,000,000 miles an hour were described here recently by Dr W. L. Chubb, director of research of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.

Dr. Chubb spoke at the annual convention of the Edison Electric Institute. Other speakers addressed the group on problems of industry and government.

Dr. Chubb explained that the atom smasher now being constructed by Westinghouse was the world's largest unit for experiments in the field of "nuclear" physics. It consisted of a huge, pear-shaped tank, thirty feet in diameter and forty-seven feet high, housing an electrostatic direct current generator and other required parts, including a forty-foot vacuum tube through which particles were shot in the bombarding of various types of targets.

The voltage generated in the atom smasher would range up to 5,000,000 and beyond. On their way to the targets, at the end of the tube, the particles would be counted, measured and identified by special instruments developed for that purpose.

They would leap from the end of the tube through thin windows of metal and strike the target with a velocity great enough to penetrate the hard centers or nuclei of the atoms, thus producing new substances.

Physicists were still studying the processes which resulted in the transmutation of one element into another, Dr. Chubb said.

"Comparatively recent discoveries," he went on, "have started a scientific revolution which we believe will have far-reaching results in discoveries of fundamental knowledge. Nearly all such knowledge has found practical application. Though we do not know where our present work will lead or exactly what results we shall gain, we know that in this field are hidden nuggets of scientific opportunity."

Dr. Chubb demonstrated an electric air cleaner which removes about 90 per cent of all particles from the air. Relief from hay fever, asthma and throat irritations was made possible by the device, he said.

"The 'Fourth Branch' of the Government" was the topic of a paper read by Bernard F. Weadock, vice president and managing director of the association.

"Lawyers, statesmen and publicists have concerned themselves with the present departure from the primary branches of government, lest a despotism be created and perpetuated rivaling in extent the 'star chamber' government of old," he said.

"This concern is indeed grave, principally because the arm of the 'fourth branch' of the government is constantly growing stronger and mightier; it extends beyond the commonly known regulated industries and into fields of industry and commerce heretofore declared to be private in nature."

H. P. Liverside, vice president and general manager of the Philadelphia Electric Company, told the convention that the great bulk of the utility industry would remain under private ownership unless the people as a nation lose their last vestige of initiative and enterprise and settle down to the dull monotony of a regimented existence.

International Exchange Of Tax Data Planned

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Following completion of the current investigation regarding tax dodgers, the States Department and the Treasury will work out a system of international exchange of tax data under which the participating countries will be enabled to locate funds abroad belonging to their nationals, it was learned here today.

Informed quarters understood that both France and Canada expressed their willingness to enter into an arrangement, which is expected to take the form of bilateral agreements rather than a multilateral convention.

High officials of the Treasury Department emphasized that such agreements are desirable not only for tax reasons but in relation to the monetary problems.

MISS KUCK COMING TO WRITE BOOKS

To write a couple of books and a series of magazine articles on Dai Nihon (Great Japan), Miss Loraine Kuck, author of "One Hundred Kyoto Gardens" published by Thompson and Co., Kobe, last year, sailed from San Francisco on the Nippon Yusen Kaisha liner Taiyo Maru Thursday afternoon.

In New York where she spent the last winter, Miss Kuck signed contracts to do popular guide to the Orient and a large and exhaustive tome on Japanese garden for "stay at homes."

Miss Kuck was a resident in Kyoto and Osaka for several years before she returned to the United States eighteen months ago.

She will be at the Imperial Hotel following her arrival.

TO VISIT JAPAN

Mrs. E. C. Boyd Shannon, of Hongkong, who visited Karuizawa last summer will arrive in Yokohama on board the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Asia July 3, to spent the summer in Karuizawa.

RETURNING TO JAPAN

Miss Betty Pearce, a 1933 graduate of the American School, who graduated from Leland Stanford University this month will arrive in Yokohama on board the President Cleveland Monday.

LEAVING TODAY

The Rev. and Mrs. T. D. Walser and their son are leaving by the 1:52 p.m. train from Tokyo Station for Yokohama from where they will sail at 5 p.m. on board the Empress of Canada on their way home on furlough.

TO GIVE PROGRAM OF SONGS

Miss Hide Fang, who has been a pupil of Mrs. Margaret Netke-Loewe, will give a short program of songs Sunday at the home of Mrs. Edith Kawasaki. She will be accompanied on the piano by one of Mrs. Kawasaki's advanced pupils. Many friends have been invited by Mrs. Mabel Bacon Happer and Mrs. Kawasaki. Good Listeners its drawbacks, however. Without advertisements in the papers, no one knows about you. A satisfied customer doesn't spread the good work because he came confidentially. If a visitor has his mind eased, he doesn't come back for more unburdening.

Another annoyance is that practical telephone pranksters become something of a pest. They want the professional listeners to listen to things no nice girl would admit hearing or they try to deduce some metaphysical interpretation of the meaning of her profession.

Warm weather hasn't affected the business of attractive, brown-eyed Alice Tefft, 379 miles away, who does the best listening in Rochester, New York.

"People have always cried on my shoulder," she said. "I have broad shoulders to cry on, so if they want to tell me their troubles, I'll listen at $2 an hour."

She advertises modestly, refuses to reveal confidences, keeps no records and doesn't even care to know the names of her visitors—if they are serious about it.

No Sage

Miss Tefft refuses advice. "How could I give it, at my age?" she asks.

Born nineteen years ago at Oxford, near Binghamton, New York, she is tall, slender and wears her hair in a long bob, combed back over her ears.

She is vivacious and an interesting conversationalist—but prefers to listen because it is more profitable.

She declares she never has been in love, is not engaged and does not "go steady." She shares a small apartment with a girl friend.

"I gained experience in listening when I carried a paper-route in my home-town," Miss Tefft tells. "I did the listening when I came around to collect. Customers who could not or would not pay always had a long-winded excuse or some troubles to tell me about."

Since her graduation last February from the Rochester Business Institute, she has assisted in a doctor's office, toted trays in a tea-room, dusted and cooked as a housemaid and worked for a manufacturer. On all these jobs she learned plenty about listening, so she decided to go in the business.

Studio Accused In Wild Party

HOLLYWOOD, June 4—The district attorney's office today investigated complaints that a movie studio called out 125 extra girls in cowgirl uniforms, transported them to a ranch house and placed them at the disposal of visiting salesmen for a wild party.

One complaint came from a 20-year-old extra girl, Patricia Douglas, who said one of the men attacked her.

Dist. Atty. Buron Fitts, taking charge of the investigation disclosed he had been given the name of a film salesman who supposedly attacked Miss Douglas.

Another girl, Ginger Wyatt, 19, made an affidavit saying Wallace Beery, the actor, had "rescued" her from the party. Mr. Beery, she said, was a guest but was not in harmony with the party. She described it as "the wildest, most drunken and worst party I ever saw."

The girls said they answered the studio's call thinking they were reporting to work. They found the ranch decorated like a miners' camp of the '49'er days, with champagne and whisky on the tables.

They soon learned they had been imported as real life entertainers, the girls said, and boisterous sales executives offered them liquor and advances.

'Very Orderly'

Mr. Beery, however, described the party as "very orderly as far as I could see."

He disclaimed credit for other than the courteous act of giving a "lift" to two of the extra girls seeking to get back to the studio.

Dep. Dist. Atty. Eugene D. Williams said he had ordered the studio to surrender the man accused of assaulting Miss Douglas by Monday, and if it failed to do so, he would issue an arrest warrant.

The girl said the man, whom she knew only as an "easterner," knocked her unconscious and attacked her in an automobile outside the ranch house.

Quoting Miss Douglas' affidavit, Mr. Williams said:

"The girls were assigned to tables as soon as they entered the ranch house. Soon a flock of men wearing convention badges swarmed in and filled the vacant chairs."

Invited 'Outside'

Miss Douglas said one delegate to the salesmen's convention sat at her table. He immediately forced his attentions upon her, invited her several times to go "outside" with him, and then asked if she was accompanying him to his hotel in Hollywood.

Mr. Williams related:

"The man insisted on plying her with liquor and she took a sip of scotch to placate him. It made her sick. She walked outside.

"A large man wearing a brown suit followed her, dragged her into a car and made violent love to her. She screamed and he slugged her into unconsciousness, she said.

Examined by Doctor

"When she came to, she said she found herself in the hands of two studio nurses. They took her to the studio physician, who, she said, examined her and announced that she had been criminally assaulted."

The girl said she suffered a black eye and bruised legs in the assault. She did not name her attacker, but said she believed she could identify him.

Big Crowds Lacking At German Exhibition

By OTTO D. TOLISCHUS

N. Y. Times

BERLIN.—The German people are urged at least two or three times daily through the radio and every other medium of publicity available to the National Socialist government to visit the exposition in Berlin entitled "Give Me Four Years' Time," an exposition designed to present with dramatic vividness the achievements of the Hitler regime in the last four years, which that regime modestly summarizes as "the German miracle."

To achieve the miracle the Hitler regime has spent, according to the best estimates, approximately 25,000,000,000 marks over and above revenues.

Because it is an account of the visible achievements of Hitler's first Four-Year Plan, the Berlin exposition enjoys far greater official publicity than the Duesseldorf exposition. "Creative People," which deals with the more technical problems of the second Four-Year Plan for German raw material independence

Populace Slow to Respond

But because these same achievements have been dinned into the German people's ears throughout all these four years and because constant propaganda tends to dull even the most receptive mind, the populace has been rather slow to respond.

According to official figures, a little more than 300,000 have visited the Berlin Exposition since it was opened by Hitler, April 30. This is only approximately 15,000 daily, which for the exposition's size is not so much, especially since the Duesseldorf attendance has been much larger and the Reich railways daily broadcast special fares for out-of-town visitors at one-third the normal rate.

But a big attendance is expected from now on in Berlin through the mass excursions of the German Labor Front's leisure organization, Strength Through Joy, which may be depended on to deliver the crowds wherever they are needed.

Even so, considering that the exposition closes June 20, it remains doubtful whether many more than 1,000,000 will be able to view it, although the exposition also fulfils its mission indirectly by giving the press an ample opportunity to describe it and thereby recall to its readers the achievement it portrays.

The exposition is predicated on the simple propagandistic premise that before Hitler there was nothing, in fact less than nothing, namely, chaos, and that all that has happened is Hitler's work.

No Comparison With Others

Nor is there a comparison with the recovery other nations have achieved since 1932 with less heroic methods. The leitmotif of the exposition is stated by the catalogue in the words of the first appeal of the Hitler Cabinet to the German people Feb. 1, 1933:

"The parties of Marxism and their camp followers have had fourteen years' time to prove what they can do. The result is a heap of ruins. Now, German people, give us four years' time, then decide and judge us."

This also has been so dinned into the German people's ears that they half-believe it, although the "heap of ruins" is portrayed at the exposition mainly by pictures of Jews said to have dominated German art and by a collection of the most violent Communist propaganda, plus certain semi-pornographic literature then permitted in Germany, among which is stuck, as if it were a part of it, Erich Maria Remarque's book "All Quiet on the Western Front."

On the whole, however, the exposition is in far better taste and therefore far more impressive and convincing.

Entertainments and a garden party were given after the ceramony.

KARUIZAWA INTERNATIONAL HOSTEL

The new Karuizawa International Hostel for Girls and Boys is nearing completion, and will be ready in every detail for the opening on July 5. The hostel is situated at Kabutoyama, in Greater Karuizawa. The grounds are extensive, consisting of 3,500 tsubo. The main building is a lodge 90 feet long, and 25 feet deep, with a veranda 8 feet wide across the entire front. There is a big fire place in the living room, all the windows are screened, and the equipment is new and modern. The furniture is being specially made.

In addition to the Big Lodge, there are three cottages for the staff and older boys and a comfortable house for the servants. The tennis courts and swimming pool are nearly completed, and a large vegetable garden has been planted.

The camp is in charge of the Reverend R. P. Pott and Miss Margaret B. MacLean, of the International School in Yokohama.

The hostel is in no sense a school, but there will be lessons in languages and mathematics for those who want to study, or who must study during the summer in order fit into their classes in the autumn. There will also be lessons for lower class students, if the parents request them.

ARRIVING TODAY

Miss Margaret Moss, daughter of Mr. R. F. Moss, is arriving today on board the Dollar liner President Cleveland to spend the summer with her family. She will return to college in the United States late in August.

SENDAI NOTES

Word has been received from Mr. Frank Moss, who has been in Yonezawa during the past year, that he will join the Sendai Foreign Community after a short furlough in the United States this summer. He is sailing from Yokohama by the President Hoover July 2, and expects to return sometime in November.

A Beach Supper, in which 23 members of the Foreign Community participated, was held at Nobiru Wednesday. After the picnickers had filled themselves with "weiners" roasted over an open fire, salad, doughnuts and coffee, the group sat on the beach till 9 p.m. singing, talking, and enjoying the moonlight. Arrangements were made by Misses Helen Boyle and Bernice Jansen.

Miss Helen Keller will be in Sendai from noon Wednesday, June 30 until the following evening. After a reception given in her honor by the city officials in the afternoon, Miss Keller will lecture at the Kokaido at 7 p.m. Wednesday, and again at one p.m. Thursday. The latter meeting will be especially for the benefit of girls' school students.

Misses Betty Stoudt, Alice McKnight and Esther McKnight, and Mr. James Fesperman returned to Sendai this week from the American School, where Miss Stoudt and Miss Alice McKnight were graduated.

Child Gambling Gaining, World W.C.T.U. Hears

N. Y. Herald Tribune

WASHINGTON, June 5—Problems of temperance education, gambling and social conditions in various countries today occupied the 2,000 delegates and guests attending the sixteenth triennial convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mrs. Emily Moffat Clow, of Ireland, deplored the increase of gambling in foreign countries—a condition which reached its peak in Bulgaria, she said, where the government post offices placed on incoming letters the words, "The state lottery brings fortune."

Mrs. Clow, World W. C. T. U. superintendent of the department of anti-gambling, declared "the most alarming increase in gambling in most countries is to be found among small children who find sanction from their parents in saving their pennies to invest in state or organization lotteries or other forms of gambling."

In but two of the twenty-four countries canvassed in a recent survey, she said, was there encouraging note in the lack or decrease of gambling. The two, she said, were Finland and Germany. One of the newest and most popular forms of gambling in central Europe, she stated are football pools.

Mlle. Idelette Perrelet, of Paris, reported that, in the face of the "discouragingly dominant influence of the leaders of the wine traffic" in France, "the most encouraging fact in recent years was that the sale of fruit and non-alcoholic fruit juices had become a commercially profitable industry, due to increasing use of these beverages in place of wine. Anti-alcoholic teaching in government schools is compulsory, she said, but so far is restricted to information regarding distilled beverages.

Miss Maude Astwood, of Paget East, said that, despite difficulties in promoting temperance sentiment and education in a country so famous in the tourist world, the Bermuda W. C. T. U. had for many years carried on "a quiet but effective presentation of the truth about beverage alcohol."

A report from Mrs. Mary L. Ennals, of Johannesburg, South Africa, also said that the countries most famous for fruits that had been so largely turned into wine were now showing the keenest interest in supporting the work of her department dealing with non-alcoholic fruit products. She suggested aiming at an annual grape or raisin day in every "white ribbon" country.

Miss Amie M. McLay, of Auckland, N. Z., world's superintendent of the citizenship department, who was represented by Mrs Hugh Kaspar, also of Auckland, reported that, while in many countries in recent years the W. C. T. U. has lead a strongly supported work for women's political enfranchisement, the efforts of the organization now in this field are being especially devoted to the education of women in wise and constructive use of their political power.

Mrs. Nina Gordon, of Belfast, said the most encouraging development in Ulster had been the Sunday closing of public houses and the abolition of the spirit grocer, while temperance education is compulsory in government secondary and public schools.

Rockefeller's Estate

The building is surrounded by three acres of property on North Lake Drive, two miles from Mr. Rockefeller's Golf House, and not far from the estates of the late George J. Gould and Arthur Brisbane.

In his original will, Mr. Rockefeller disclosed that he had made three gifts totaling $2,133,000 to Mrs. de Cuevas in 1919, eight years before her marriage. That sum was to have been deducted from her share of his wealth if, under the terms of the original will, Mr. Rockefeller had outlived his son and half of his estate had been divided equally among his descendants.

The same, it was found, was the case for Mr. Rockefeller's grandson, Harold Fowler McCormick jr., who, according to the will, received two gifts totaling $709,550 in 1919.

The probate petition submitted by Mr. Rockefeller jr. listed the names of those signing his father's will and codicils. The will was signed by Nestor W. Davis, Harry P. Fish and Philip F. Keebler, secretary to Mr. Rockefeller jr.

The first and second codicils were signed by Fannie A. Evans, a distant cousin of Mr. Rockefeller and his hostess for several years; Mr. Davis and John H. Yordi, Mr. Rockefeller's male nurse and valet. Signing the third codicil were Mrs. Evans, Mr. Yordi and Ward N. Madison, Mr. Rockefeller's secretary.

The petition set forth that Mr. Rockefeller was a resident of Pocantico Hills in the Town of Mount Pleasant, Westchester County, "and departed this life at the Town of Ormond, in the County of Volusia, State of Florida ,on the 23d day of May, 1937, at the age of ninety-seven years."

Among the persons described in the petition because they were mentioned in the will were: Alta Rockefeller Prentice, of 5 West Fifty-third Street, a daughter of Mr. Rockefeller sr.; Fowler McCormick, Barrington, Ill., son of the late Edith Rockefeller McCormick, another daughter, and Muriel McCormick Hubbard, of Lone Tree Farm, Middletown, Conn., and Mathidle McCormick Oser, of La Ferme du Boiron, St. Prex, Switzerland, both daughters of the late Mrs. McCormick.

Also described because they were named in the will to trustee or executor posts only to have the appointments canceled in the codicil of 1934 were Dr. Raymond B. Fosdick, of 71 East Seventy-seventh Street, and Edward L. Ballard, of Ridgefield, Conn., both formerly trustees and alternate executors, and Albert G. Milbank, of Huntington, L. I., and Arthur Woods, both formerly alternate executors and alternate trustees.

The petition asserted that all the distrubutees, beneficiaries, executors and trustees named in the will and codicils citizens of the United States except Anita Oser and Peter Max Oser, Swiss citizens, and Elizabeth de Cuevas, as citizen of Chile.

Mr. Rockefeller jr. also wrote that "the value of the real property in this state of which the decedent died seized is unknown."

The first step in the state's action to collect the inheritance levy on Mr. Rockefeller's estate will be an application of attorneys for the estate for designation of an appraiser, according to tax officials interviewed by the United Press at Albany. The Westchester County appraiser is James Fleming.

After submission of an appraiser's report, the executors of the estate and the tax department have sixty days in which to file objections. The Surrogate then rules finally on the report.

If attorneys for the estate wish to do so they may effect a 6 per cent saving by paying the estate tax within six months after the approval of the appraiser's report. Estate taxes become subject to penalties as high as 10 per cent if they remain unpaid eighteen months after death.

Some Goiter Is Traced

ment, must be carried on through private initiative. State activity, no matter how well administered, can never successfully take the place of the private practitioner, or the privately endowed institution.

"Government can never be substituted for the interests of the countless thousands of men and women, both professional and lay, who have given themselves without stint and without thought of self, to the social and technical services which people have come to expect and have come to demand.

"Finally, government, operating wholly with public moneys, can never carry on the work of research, of experimentation, or of developing new and improved methods of treatment or prevention. That must be done through private initiative, subject not to the taxpayer, but subject to those people, those public-spirited men and women citizens of our community, who are willing to see their money bring in no return, if necessary, for a generation or more, but eager to serve humanity for a long pull, and over a broad picture."

Governor Lehman mentioned the appropriation by the last Legislature of $600,000 for the State Institute for Cancer Research at Buffalo, which "will permit an increase from thirty to 100 beds in that institution," and of the similar appropriation of $400,000 for the manufacture and distribution by the State Laboratory at Albany of the pneumonia serums, "to permit us to increase the manufacture of sera from the two types which we have been using for some years to the six or seven types that have been developed."

Governor Lehman spoke of the important work at the institution at West Haverstraw for the care of crippled children, which he said is regarded by specialists as second to none, but "unfortunately only can take care of 350 to 400 of these youngsters."

"We carry on research," the Governor added, "in our great, great psychiatric institution here and in Syracuse, and one of the very interesting experiments which is being carried on now is the treatment of our insane, those suffering from dementia praecox, through the insulin treatment, and I am glad to say that we show very encouraging results in at least six of the State institutions."

Goiter Theory Challenged

Goiter is caused by the malfunctioning of the thyroid gland, the body's "power house," in the neck. There are two types of goiter. One, known as endemic goiter, is found in localities where the water supply does not contain sufficient iodine, the substance utilized by the thyroid. For this reason, it has been generally believed that endemic goiter is the direct result of the iodine insufficiency.

Dr. Crotti challenged this theory of iodine deficiency as a "true primary cause of goiter."

"Even if we should concede," he said, "that iodine prevents the formation of goiter (and this is by means scientifically demonstrated), to state that goiter is due to iodine deficiency is simply jumping at conclusions."

During persistent research for the primary cause of goiter, which began in 1910, Dr. Crotti said, he had succeeded in isolating from fresh human goiter material removed in the operating room "a tiny body, round or oval in shape, motile, golden in appearance; therefore it was called the golden body." "These golden bodies are spores, which have been found to reproduce themselves," he said, reporting also that the life cycle of this fungus had been established.

Reveals Experimental Findings

On further experiments, Dr. Crotti reported the following results:

The same fungus also is found to exist in water supplies associated with the production of goiter in their localities; injection of this fungus in dogs results in the reproduction of goiter; the same fungus can be reclaimed from the dogs experimented upon; the same fungus also has been found in cabbage, which, in a short time produces goiter in rabbits; the fungus can then be reclaimed from the rabbits fed on the cabbage; the human goiter fungus and the fungus found in the cabbage seem to be same.

Furthermore, Dr. Crotti reported, iodine does not protect rabbits fed on the fungus cabbage against the formation of goiter.

The same fungus, Dr. Crotti added, also is found in the second major type of goiter, known as thyro-toxic goiter. The thought comes to mind, he said, "that possibly the goiter fungus might be the cause of both the endemic and the thyro-toxic goiter.

Dr. P. Brooke Bland of the Jefferson Medical College Hospital, Philadelphia, in a joint paper with Dr. A. E. Rakoff, urged that to prevent the transmission of syphilis to the unborn child "every expectant mother must be actively treated throughout gestation, for it is by this measure only that the birth of uncontaminated or healthy children can be assured."

Before he died, he expressed his vexation at having been unable to exhaust this subject.

League Raw Materials Committee Ends Session

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

GENEVA, June 25—The League of Nations' special committee on the raw materials question, in session here since June 16, this evening wound up its ten-day discussion, after deciding that the committee meet in session again here on September 1. In the course of the current session, it is recalled, the committee nominated two subcommittees, one to examine difficulties standing in the way of smooth exportation of raw materials, the other to study difficulties in payments.

Cunard Building Ship

BREAKING UP AT WINDSOR HOUSE

The occasion of the "Breaking up" for the Summer vacation at Windsor House School, furnished a suitable opportunity for all connected with the School to show their keen appreciation of the untiring care and unremitting zeal for their welfare which has always been displayed by Mrs. Baines, who to the great regret of all concerned is severing her long connection with the School, owing to her impending return to England.

In a short speech, the Senior Girl of the School, Laeeb Ali, asked Mrs. Baines to accept as a token of love and appreciation of the whole school, pupils and staff alike, a Korean chest, which they hoped would serve the double purpose of being a reminder of her days in the Orient, and of her connection with Windsor House School.

In expressing her thanks and appreciation for the School's gift, Mrs. Baines made a charming and appropriate speech, in which she also gave much good and helpful advice to those she was now leaving behind. She ventured to hope that in many cases it might be "Au revoir" and not farewell, in that she trusted to see many of her old friends and pupils at her home in London, if they should be there, as doubtless some would be.

The Head Boy, Victor Reuben, on behalf of the boys of the School, thanked Mrs. Baines for all she had done for them, and endorsed all that Laeeq Ali, the Head Girl, had said.

The proceedings terminated with hearty cheers for Mrs. Baines, the singing of the School "Breaking Up" hymn and the singing of the National Anthem.

13-Month Baby's Fetus Is Removed

When 13-month-old Barbara Stobie's protruding abdomen grew so big that she seemed ready to give birth to a baby of her own, her young mother, wife of a southern Oregon timber worker, finally took her to a local doctor. He suggested that the baby go to the Doernbecher Memorial Hospital which the State of Oregon maintains in Portland as an adjunct of the University of Oregon medical school. There the blonde little caricature of motherhood underwent an X-ray examination a fortnight ago. This revealed to the dumbfounded staff of the hospital that Barbara Stobie was indeed carrying a child. Plainly visible were part of its bony skull, spine, arms, legs.

Barbara Stobie was delivered of this monstrosity. As an artist and photographers recorded the scene, Surgeon Clarence William Brunkow made a seven-inch incision from the tip of her breast bone past the left of her navel. Lying horizontally within her abdomen, between the top of her stomach and her spine, was a skin-like sac. Segments of Barbara's bowels were fastened to this sac.

When he slit open the sac, the pink buttocks of a five-month fetus protruded. In attempting to lift out the fetus, Dr. Brunkow felt some resistance: the monster's head was attached to the sac. Dr. Brunkow cut this attachment and then found that the inclusion's liver, which had developed outside its body, was also attached to the sac. Another nick of a scalpel freed Barbara Stobie of her abnormal burden and permitted Dr. Brunkow to close her up. He left the skin-like sac within her, to be removed at some more favorable time.

As it lay in an enameled operating-room tray, the fetus seemed to be that of a boy. It measured seven inches and had patches of infant's down on its torso. It lacked a face, had part of a brain. Its right foot had six webbed toe buds, its left foot four. Its arms, fastened to its sides, had webbed finger buds. Fingers and toes had rudiments of nails. As Barbara Stobie went to her bed in a ward, Pathologist Warren Clair Hunter of the University of Oregon medical school took the monstrous fetus to his laboratory to learn what was inside (a three months' job) and to guess at how the brother ovum, from which it developed got inside the embryo which became Barbara Stobie 13 months ago.

whose membership is limited to globe trotters who have been to the Islands on two or more trips. The roster of this "Hawaii habit" club includes such names as Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Warner Baxter, William Powell, and Janet Gaynor, who has her own home at a secluded beach thirty miles from Honolulu.

Mary Astor's daughter is technically a native Hawaiian, having been born in Honolulu in 1932 a short time after the actress and her husband, Dr. Thorpe, arrived at the Islands on their private yacht.

Screen luminaries who have combined Hawaiian business and pleasure on recent "location" trips, include Dolores Del Rio, Harold Lloyd, Robert Montgomery, Dorothy Mackaill and Jimmy Durante.

Bing Crosby's Island holiday last year was the inspiration for the currently popular "Waikiki Wedding."

Warner Olund takes occasional jaunts to Honolulu to expose himself to Hawaiian atmosphere and to brush up on his Charlie Chan-ese.

The Hollywood invasion is not limited to the stars; as directors, executives and scenarists have also discovered the way to Waikiki. Director John Ford's yacht Araner "ferries" on regular commuting trips between Los Angeles and the Hawaiian port. The Fords have maintained a home in Hawaii throughout the past year, and their children have been attending school in Honolulu.

Chang Tso-lin Buried 9 Years After His Death

N.C. Daily News

MUKDEN, June 11.—Just nine years after that explosion at Three-span Bridge, where the South Manchuria Railway crosses over the line from Peiping west of Mukden city, which ended the life of Marshal Chang Tso-lin, a special train passed under that same bridge. It carried the coffin of the late ruler of the Manchurian Provinces to its last resting place.

His funeral, in 1928, had been attended by a host of distinguished mourners. The funeral banquet, the ceremonies and the gifts from those who had been bidden to the funeral feats were on a truly regal scale.

Fifty miles from Mukden, on the Mukden-Kirin Line, is the station Yuanshuailin, or Marshal's Grove. It had been intended to call this Puanshuailing, Marshal's Tomb, but it was decided to give it the more euphonious name. Following the branch-line through a notch in the hills about one mile from the railway one finds the beautiful tomb which had been prepared to receive the mortal remains of the "Uncrowned King of Manchuria." Beautiful stones from the Paoshan in Shantung, rare marbles from Peiping had been prepared at this beautiful site, in comparison with which the old Imperial Tombs in this vicinity pale iinto insignificance.

Burial Postponed

Construction work was not quite complete when the Japanese Army took possession of Mukden, September 18, 1931. The coffin of the old Marshal was still at his residence when the Kwantung Army, led by General Honjo, took possession of the place. The Army and later the regime which they sponsored, treated the remains of the Marshal with respect, but found this item of their booty a rather embarrassing asset.

According to the attendants at a later resting-place of the coffin, it was transferred from the residence to a mortuary, in whose numerous cells lie the coffins of these Chinese who died in this neighborhood and whose families are not yet ready to remove their coffins to their final resting places. According to the report, the Marshal's coffin was brought from the residence to the temple just outside the Hsiao Tungpienmen (Small East Border Gate), on a truck escorted by Japanese soldiers and the two private compartments in the mortuary temple were set aside to receive it.

Your correspondent and a friend secured permission to enter these locked compartments. We were told that the only other visitor had been the second wife of the Marshal. In this small compartment, measuring perhaps 10 x 20 ft., the coffin, mounted on tresles and screened by a silk curtain, occupied half of the space. In front of it a cushion for kneeling was flanked on either side by easels supporting wreaths of artificial flowers.

The selection of the few samples from the vast array of presents which we had seen at the actual funeral was meager but interesting. A large silver wreath from General Honjo occupied the place of honor, and on the wall was noticed a present from officers of the old Russian Imperial Army.

For several years this coffin has rested in the temporary receiving vault. On June 2, 1937, at 8.30 a.m., ceremonies were held with Lamaist, Buddhist and Taoist rites. About 400 mourners, including relatives of the deceased and some former officials who had served under him were at the old Temple.

The Hsiehhohui (Concordia Society) had formed a special committee of arrangements made up of members of the society and relatives of the late Marshal. Mr. Takeuchi, chairman of the Fengtien Headquarters of the Concordia Society, members of the society, officials and others attended. At 11 a.m. the funeral procession moved off through the walled city and the small West Suburb to the Central Railway Station, 46 bearers carrying the coffin. For the last time the streets of Mukden were cleared of traffic to mark the passage of Marshal Chang.

Special Funeral Train

The special train pulled out of that station which the old Marshal had never reached on his last and fatal trip. Passing under the bridge, which a cleverly placed demolition charge had wrecked with such tragic consequences just nine years before, the train proceeded to the Stone Mountain station (Shihshanchan) 139 miles southwest of Mukden. Large crowds of residents of that rural district lined the road to the burying ground, where the mother of Marshal Chang and his first wife had long been interred. So closes a brief but important chapter of the history of Manchuria.

The stepson of a village veterinary, without advantages of education or position, he had fought his way up until, for a brief while, he controlled the destinies of about one-eighth of the inhabitants of this planet. A vacant tomb looking down over long flights of marble steps, with a series of arches and temples, more extensive and in a more beautiful location than that allotted to most emperors, remains as at least a temporary monument to the successes of that remarkable character, while this burial in a village graveyard indicates the tragic collapse of the empire which he had built up.

At Heart a Monarchist

Although nominally a high officer in the Army of the Republic of China, Chang the elder was, at heart, a Monarchist, and it is reported that on several occasions when passing through Tientsin he had shown his respect for the last of the Ching Emperors, who has since been enthroned as the first Emperor of Manchoukuo, ruling the same territories where the slightest whim of the old Marshal was once absolute law.

The story of the Marshal's early career, his enlistment in the cavalry during the Sino-Japanese War, his activities during the Russo-Japanese War, and his rapid rise to power at the beginning of the republican regime, has been told in fragmentary articles, which lack accuracy and did scant justice to the meteoric career of this remarkable character.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

The Women Candidates For U.S. President

Two women were candidates for President of the United States. The first was Victoria Woodhull (1838-1927), who ran on the Equal Rights Party's Ticket in 1872. The second was Belva A. Lockwood of New York (1830-1917), who was nominated in 1884 and 1888. At the election of 1884, Mrs. Lockwood, in addition to a considerable popular vote, received the electoral vote of two states, Indiana and Oregon. These two states then represented a total electoral vote of 16, which is double the 8 electoral votes received by Landon in 1936.

Proof

The schoolteacher had been telling her pupils something about George Washington.

"Now," she said, "can anyone tell me which Washington was—a great general or a great admiral?"

The small son of a seaman raised his hand and she signaled him to speak.

"He was a great general," said the boy. "I saw a picture of him crossing the Delaware—and no great admiral would put out from shore standing up in a skiff."

Ambitions for Him

"What are you studying now?" fondly asked the new-rich mother of her youngest son.

"We have just begun the study of molecules," he answered.

For a moment she looked blank; then a gleam of interest showed in her eyes. "I hope you will be very attentive and practice constantly," she exclaimed eagerly. "I tried to get your father to wear one, but he couldn't keep it in his eye."

MR. OVERTON PRESENTS ORGAN RECITAL

Mr. Douglas Overton of St. Paul's University, presented an interesting program of organ music in the Chapel of Tohoku Gakuin, Sendai Sunday, June 27. A large audience which included practically the whole foreign community and many Japanese lovers of music were deeply appreciative of this unusual opportunity to hear their fine organ so well played, as Mr. Overton's playing showed to advantage both the beauty of the instrument and his own skill and musicianship.

The program consisted of:

1. Little Fugue in G Minor..Bach
2. Visione .....Rheinberger
3. Three Chorale Preludes.../Bach
   (a) Jesus, Joy of Man's Desiring
   (b) Have Mercy upon me, O Lord
   (c) Awake, Awake, for Night is Flying
4. Le Petit Bergere .....Debussy
5. Canon in B Minor ....Schumann
6. (a) Petite Fugue .....Handel
   (b) Siciliano .....Bach
7. Prelude from "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
8. Suite Gothique .....Boellmann
   (a) Chorale
   (b) Minuet Gothique
   (c) Priere a Notre Dame
   (d) Toccata

INDIAN EVENING AT GORAKUJI TEMPLE

Saturday evening was for all practical purposes an Indian Evening for the Higashi Gokurakuji of Ikuta-cho, 2-chome, Kobe.

The program was sponsored under the joint auspices of the Indian National Committee of Japan, the Kansai Nichi-In Kyokai and the Federation of the Buddhist Associations of Kobe and it consisted of a lecture on Indian music by Professor G. Masu, who has returned from India only recently after nearly two years' study of Indian music and musical instruments, and a magical performance by Professor P. C. Sorcar a famous magician of India now in Japan. Both the items proved very interesting and entertaining. The spacious hall of the temple was filled to capacity.

Forges Of War Flame Over Europe

By HANSON W. BALDWIN

(Concluded from Yesterday)

The old French battlefields of 1914 are thus the drill grounds of 1937. Men of a new generation, armed with weapons far more terrible than those of World War days, prepare against "Tattaque brusque." It is that attack—sudden, swift, without warning, from land and from air—that France and some of the smaller nations of Europe fear; it is against such a surprise that France prepares.

Factories are moved from Paris and branches built in less exposed places. Four hundred "barrage" balloons are ready and more are ordered for the aerial entanglements that are to help protect the city. The steel and concrete fortifications of the Maginot line—the gaps between fortresses plugged with tank mines and railroad rails upended in the earth—extend from Switzerland to Belgium and are reaching toward the sea. More than 200,000 men of the strong French Army are concentrated on or near the northern border. The cost will be about $24 per capita during 1937 alone.

A hundred thousand men—more or less—work in the aircraft industry of Germany. Krupps, which makes some of the finest guns on earth, employs about 40,000 in its main works at Essen. Kiel and Hamburg and the other shipyards of the Third Reich are clogged with the gaunt skeletons of half-finished ships—submarines, cruisers, destroyers, three battleships, two carriers, as well as tankers and merchant shipping.

Men in uniform throng Germany. They are the men whose growing divisions are the fear of Europe, for whom power is glory. They have already upset the military theories of a Continent. They mass seventy-two anti-tank guns to a division and their war doctrine calls for the use of 100 tanks—one every thirty feet—to a kilometer of a front. These men fly by night and day under the orders of a general staff that is one of the finest in Europe. They become themselves machines tending machines of war.

No one knows exactly how much Germany is spending on armaments or how large her army or air force is. But one has only to see the hard, cold precision of the German legions; one has only to read the inscriptions to Germany's lost colonies on the wreath and crepe-decorated tablets in the Feldherrnhalle in Munich to realize that here is a nation dedicated to the glorification of military might.

In Russia the tiniest of school children vie with each other in gas-mask contests, and the largest army in the world, about 1,350,000 men, distributed in garrison from Minsk to Vladivostok, plans a system of attack attack, constant attack.

Russia's planes darken the skies, and not only in number but in performance (particularly some of those that have seen service in the Spanish Civil War) have awed Europe. Russian cavalry—the largest body of horsemen in Europe—still rides in the saddle, instead of in the bucking leather-cushioned seat of a "mechanical horse," but Russian mechanized divisions are formidable both in weight of numbers and in quality. Russian submarines are now numbered by the score, and Russia is beginning to build heavier ships and cruisers. Her reserve of man power, hitherto strong in quantity but weak in quality, owing to insufficient training, yearly becomes more powerful. Factories have sprung up all over Russia; communications and transportation are being improved. The cost—unknown, but estimated to be about $3,000,000,000 last year.

Along the spine of mountains that reaches out into the blue waters of the Mediterranean Sea the legions of a modern Rome march under a modern Caesar. Italy's army, flushed by its victory in Ethiopia, is numerically probably the second largest in the world, and, relieved of the embarrassment of sanctions and stung by the Italian defeat in Spain, it is growing stronger. Uniforms are everywhere—at the frontier, on the seacoast, inland. The State is rapidly realizing Mussolini's dream of a nation in arms. Lads still in their 'teens lean on great swords that reach to their chest; a man is not well dressed without sword or gun. The Italian Army, at the peak of its Ethiopian strength, numbered about 1,200,000 (some units, however, have since been demobilized), and Il Duce declares he can put 8,000,000 trained and equipped men in the field.

Yet Mussolini is still unsatisfied with the military strength of the nation; lately he has offered still other inducements to increase the birth rate and thus the mobilizable man power. Italy's geographical position, plus her growing strength on land and sea, has already threatened Britain's control of the Mediterranean. But there is no evidence that Italy is resting on her sword. The 35,000-ton battleships Vittorio Veneto and Littorio are building at Trieste and Genoa; each year Italy produces faster planes and more of them; 1,200 factories turn out the stuff of war.

The Pantellarias are being fortified, and a strategic road and airdromes have been built in Northern Africa. Naval bases and air fields are being developed in Italy, in Sicily and Sardinia and Libya and the Dodecanese. Roads straddle the spiny mountains of the peninsula; railroads tunnel beneath the peaks.

The smaller countries of Europe know no peace. Threatened by the ever-growing might of their strong neighbors, torn by dissensions among themselves, they have not been slow to take up the gauntlet of this rearming world.

In Poland, in a little pine copse near the Vistula, is a tiny cemetery with forgotten headstones in memory of the men of the First Siberian Regiment who stopped the German advance toward Warsaw in 1914. In a large camp outside Warsaw men test with the most precise of mathematical instruments the latest weapons of war. About half of the budget goes against the threat of war (including both direct and indirect military expenditures). Peasant boys charge with slashing sabers against imaginary foes, and at the PZL plane factory in Warsaw other peasant boys work at full speed turning out pursuit ships for the war in the skies.

Czechoslovakia, thrust like a dangerous salient into Germany, has reorganized her army, taken all limits off conscription, is redistributing her industries and her air fields, and through her famous Skoda armaments works is rearming her allies of the Little Entente—Yugoslavia and Rumania.

Down along the Adriatic the Serbs and their fellow-races—highly respected fighters—are sharpening the national sword and increasing their aviation strength. Turkey has entrusted Skoda and Krupp with the job of refortifying the Dardannelles and is building a factory of her own.

Even Austria and Hungary, though ostensibly limited by the peace treaties to tiny armies and no planes, have built up quite respectable military organizations, which total between them from 11,000 to 120,000 men. Austria is expected to add some 80 or 100 new planes to her present air force of 100 before the end of the Summer. Hungary is reported to have about 100 military planes in concealment.

Farther west, Belgium, despite her striving after neutrality, has lined the banks of her canals and rivers with 37-millimeter anti-tank guns, and even peaceful Holland is building blockhouses along her frontiers and increasing the size of her small army. Switzerland is fortifying her Alpine passes and, in the north, Scandinavian countries are not untouched by the fear of war. Finland, Norway and Sweden are building or buying planes or plane factories, ships and guns, and are training men to use them.

And over all there is secrecy, and its accompanying phobia—tension. No one knows when war will come. The "cheerfully cynical" Viennese shrug their shoulders and predict only that it will start "on a Saturday." But all governments fear—and many are certain—that come it must, and against that day they are burnishing their already shining swords.

U.S. Neutrality Is Called an Aid To Democracies

By JOHN T. WHITAKER

N.Y. Herald Tribune

ROME, June 5—The full effect of America's neutrality legislation is just dawning on Europeans, and what they think of it probably would startle the legislators on Capitol Hill. Washington may still do lip-service to the admonition "against entangling alliances," but European consider that America has aligned itself in event of war.

The British and the French like the American neutrality policy, but the rest of Europe consider that the United States has joined the front against Fascism as truly as if it had signed a formal alliance.

What does "cash and carry" mean in practice? It means that only the British and the French have cash to buy and ships to carry American munition materials and sinews of war. War is the only adventure on which one can embark without funds and against all rules of normal or sane undertaking, but one cannot fight a war without either munitions or credits.

Britain, France Have Money

This is the first point of importance stressed by Europeans, who point out that the major powers of Great Britain and France can get along without such credits, and are generally considered to be bent on peace.

The second point—and this is equally important—comes out of the experience of the Spanish war, which seems to show that modern warfare advantages go to the defensive. This discourages the theory of the smash-and-grab invasions of the sort that Hans von Seeckt worked out on the theory of a highly mechanized, mobile and offensive force to strike and paralyze the enemy quickly.

The Spanish conflict is not, of course, a fair test for the defensive versus the offensive, but it has served to discourage youthful enthusiasts of one sort or another. Similarly, Spain has discouraged any confidence that the poorer powers, which must win quickly or not at all, have had in the efficacy of mass aerial attack.

Poor Powers Fall Behind

The third point stressed is that the poor "have not" powers cannot keep pace with the "haves." It is not only Great Britain's five-year $7,500,000,000 program, but the fact, too, that France in twelve months is spending 35,000,000,000 francs on armament.

This sort of thing leaves the United States in the balance of power, a position which is all the more important if one looks at the clear-cut and unequivocal arms lesson of Spain, namely, the superiority of Russian aircraft over German, Italian, British and French planes.

These vastly superior Russian planes are adaptations of Martin bombers and Curtiss Hawk fighters. American aircraft companies may not sell their patents and designs to Europeans, however, until two years after the United States Army and Navy have had them. This has led many European observers to assume, therefore, that American airplanes are vastly superior to anything produced in Europe.

U.S. Planes May Be Vital

In event of war, purchase of designs or patents of American planes and the machinery and raw materials to make them might very easily spell victory for one power or another. The American neutrality legislation is interpreted by Europe as meaning that only Great Britain and France are to enjoy this advantage.

The conclusion of Europeans, consequently, is this: America hopes to avoid sending troops to Europe as long as she can, but from the moment war starts she will send decisive foodstuffs and raw materials to her democratic allies.

Smartest Girl In Town

foolery. Helen Broderick as the acid-tongued sister, Eric Blore as Raymond's timorous valet, Erik Rhodes as the foreign egg-fancier, and Harry Jans as Miss Broderick's indolent husband—all have noteworthy parts in the laughter-packed scenes of the film.

With its settings in and around New York City, "Smartest Girl in Town," depicts modern advertising agency work and the lives of the alluring models who pose for the advertisements in magazines and newspapers today.

Besides the featured players, the cast includes Jenks, Fred Santley, Hattie MacDaniels, Arthur Loft and other well-known film personalities.

Edward Kaufman and Joseph Santley, respectively the producer and director of "Walking on Air," performed the same duties on the new picture. Viola Brothers Shore, who was associated with the script of the earlier film, wrote the screenplay of "Smartest Girl in Town," an RKO Radio Picture, from the original story by Muriel Scheck and H. S. Kraft.

100,000 Homes For Toronto Slums

Christian Science Monitor

TORONTO—In an endeavor to place the matter of slum clearance before the city in such a way that slums would be replaced by clean, comfortable houses, Dr. H. A. Bruce, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, in a recent address here before the Empire Club, outlined a suggestion for a workable housing scheme, based on the findings of his Housing Committee.

Advocating the immediate erection of 100,000 new Toronto homes, in blocks of hundreds and thousands, to be rented to low-paid workmen for $15 to $24 monthly, Dr. Bruce proposed that the cost of the project be borne by the three governments, estimating the necessary maximum annual subsidy at $10,000,000, the Dominion paying five millions and Ontario and Toronto sharing the other half.

A $2500 house can be erected for an annual subsidy of $100 a year, and an economic rent would be $24 a month. Subsidies are necessary, for no average low wage earner can pay more than $15 a month, so that the difference must be met by a state fund. Not until the scale of the contribution is arranged can this necessary Dominion-wide drive on poor housing become possible.

Contending that the scheme would be a great stimulus to employment and a great influence in the moral improvement of Canada, Dr. Bruce said that everywhere that housing plans have been inaugurated, unemployment relief costs have dropped.

Once begun, Dr. Bruce stated, improvement spreads all through cities where it is undertaken, and no form of public works is so effective in direct and indirect results as building.

GIVE RECEPTION

The British Military Attache and Mrs. F. S. G. Piggott entertained at a reception Wednesday in honor of the Rev. and Mrs. C. K. Sansbury, who are leaving Japan Saturday with their family, on furlough. Mr. and Mrs. Sansbury have been in Japan for over five years and for much of that time Mr. Sansbury has been the chaplain of St. Andrew's Church.

During the course of the afternoon Major General Piggott gave a talk in which he said that the purpose of the reception was not to say good-bye to the Sansburys but to thank them for all they have done for the communities in Tokyo.

Mr. and Mrs. Sansbury expect to be back in Tokyo in August 1938.

MALINI AT TOKYO CLUB

Mr. Max Malini, the famous American magician, gave an entertainment at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Tokyo Club. On this occasion the club was open to ladies and the large hall was filled with members of the club, their wives, families and friends.

ARRIVES TODAY

Miss Anne Brooke, daughter of Colonel George Mercer Brooke, who was in Tokyo from 1913 to 1916 as United States language student, will arrive in Yokohama at 6:30 today on board the N.Y.K. liner Hikawa Maru to make an extended visit with her aunt, Mr. James A. Rabbitt.

LEAVE FOR KAMAKURA

The American Secretary and Mrs. George D. Andrews left for Kamakura Wednesday where they have taken a house for the summer

IN KARUIZAWA

Mrs. Carolyn Holbrook has gone to Karuizawa where she will stay during the summer months.

LEAVE FOR KARUIZAWA

The American Military Attache and Mrs. Carey Crane and their family left Tokyo today for their summer home in Karuizawa.

ARRIVING IN JAPAN

Mrs. Eric Lewis, formerly a resident of Tokyo, will arrive in Tokyo Friday, with her daughter Marjorie from Shanghai. Marjorie will visit for a short time at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Graham before going up with her mother to Chuzenji for the summer. Mrs. Lewis and her daughter will return to Shanghai in September.

TO GIVE LECTURE

The Brazilian Ambassador, Mr. P. Leao Velloso, will lecture Thursday evening to T.I.H. Prince and Princess Takamatsu and members of the Nippon-Brazilian Central Society, on the occasion of its 5th general meeting, on the "Economic and Cultural relations between Japan and Brazil."

Insurgent Spain

region must leave it with mixed impressions.

There can be no question of any active and widespread preference for the rule of the Valencia Government. The dominance of the Casa del Pueblo and the trade unions; the arbitrary decisions of the labor tribunals; the bands of sturdy beggars that roamed the countryside and infested the towns; the inaction of the police—all these factors that made life always difficult and sometimes dangerous under the short rule of the Frente Popular are still memories of the recent past, memories, moreover, that have been rammed home by propagandist capitalization of the atrocities committed in too many of the villages where Labor leaders gained temporary control and swiftly earned the terrible retribution that was ruthlessly meted out to them. Few men in Andalusia have the inclination to risk certain death for the restoration of such conditions.

Law and Order

Nor is there any immediate incentive to do so. According to most reports from insurgent Spain, complete normality prevails throughout the country. This verdict owes more to fervor than to judgment, but conditions are unquestionably as normal as can be expected. Trains are few, irregular and overcrowded. Road transport is not always comfortable. Accommodation is scarce, though rents are still low. Smokers who roll their own cigarettes (they are in the majority in Spain) are sometimes embarrassed by the abundance of tobacco on days when no cigarette paper is available and vice versa. Many articles formerly imported, such as medicines, tires, and spare parts, are scarce owing to lack of foreign exchange. Though Italian textile manufacturers stepped into the breach created by the stoppage of trade with Catalonia, they are now finding difficulty in collecting payment.

Entertainment is suffering. Pardonable exuberance on the part of the Moors and Legionaries returning from the front led to progressively earlier closing of the bars, cabarets, and dance-halls—a process that was accelerated by the arrival of the quick-tempered Italian. Foreign films are usually shown now in the language of the original, as the superimposition of Spanish dialogue has hitherto been done in Madrid. The great April Fair had to be abandoned, and a "token" novillada was substituted for the great series of bullfights that normally open the Sevillian season.

Nevertheless, these are minor worries for a country at war. Law and order reign throughout the region under General Franco's control. Life and property are secure provided that nobody meddles in politics. The potato supply runs out from time to time and the price of meat is rising slightly. But foodstuffs in general are abundant even when judged by Spanish standards, though troops in the front line, owing to occasional breakdowns in the transport system, complain with justice that they are less well treated in this respect. Agriculture, though suffering from appalling losses of able-bodied men, is relatively prosperous; and Jerez still produces its superb waters of forgetfulness in tranquillity.

Patriotic Nucleus

Such general considerations go far to substantiate General Franco's claim that he has at any rate his part of the country behind him. But the character of the support he is getting is too negative to be wholly reassuring. "This rather than that" is an attitude that leads its devotees to exult immoderately in a victorious cause, but not necessarily to die for a losing one. The majority of Spaniards in insurgent Spain still pay lip-service to the Nationalist cause; and pay it honestly. But in a great many cases determination to win the war has yielded to a longing for the war to end, no matter how. There is a great deal of unseemly nervousness whenever it is rumored that a new class is about to be called to the Colors. The insurgents needed Malaga in February. They need Bilbao now. And before the autumn they may desperately need Madrid.

General Franco's movement remains what it always was—the movement of a relatively small nucleus of patriotic enthusiasts grouped round a smaller nucleus of regular troops. The movement enjoys the support of large sections of the population all over Spain, perhaps even of the majority. But continued support depends on continued success. The population is prepared and eager to see the movement win, but is neither eager nor prepared to risk too much for victory. The Requetes supply General Franco with his most solid element of civil backing. They enjoy the advantages of organic growth and their ideals and organization have been tested through decades of strife. The military support they offered Franco in the early days of the movement proved of great value. But they suffer from lack of numbers, the more so for losses on the battlefield.

The Falange Espanola was also a small organization last spring. Since the outbreak of war it has become a mass movement. But while its numbers are impressive their quality is poor. The doors of membership were opened too wide last summer and all whose livelihood and personal safety depended on visible adherence to the Nationalist cause passed in. Too many of its members regard the wearing of a uniform as the beginning and end of their duty. The organization suffers also, since the presumed death of Antonio Primo de Rivera, from lack of leadership, recently shown by the removal of Senor Hedilla from the Secretariat.

The Foreign Volunteers

Prolongation of the war and particularly the defeat at Guadalajara has had another effect that may well prove increasingly important. The early arrival of German and Italian volunteers was greeted with enthusiasm by the population. They were mostly airmen, gunners, and technicians. They played an important part in helping General Franco to his early successes, and the fabulous German anti-aircraft batteries in particular earned the gratitude of civilians by laying the bogy of attack from the air.

Matters changed with the arrival of large numbers of Italian Regulars during the winter. The first reaction of the Spaniards was gratitude mingled with confidence that the war would soon be over. The part played by the Italian infantry in the spectacular operations against Malaga enhanced their popularity. Gradually the attitude changed. Many of the Italians had previously been stationed in Ethiopia. They brought with them habits acquired in that country. They assumed too readily that the Spaniard was a poor fighting man and made little attempt to hide that assumption. And, as a result, a certain grim satisfaction was felt when the news of the retreat from Brihuega spread. Dislike was spiced with a touch of anger and contempt. While there can be no question yet of any general outcry against them in the Peninsula, active acquiescence in their presence will certainly be severely proportioned to their success on the battlefield.

For Spain is, above all, war-weary. The man in the street longs for a return to the normal. He has had enough of casualty lists, of the interruption of business, of public subscriptions, of increased taxation. He is not eager to go to the front. Above all, he wants news of his friends, relatives, and property on the other side of the firing line. He has probably had no word from his parents and children for months, perhaps not since the beginning of the war. For all he knows they may be uncomfortable, ill, starving, or even dead. It is impossible to spend a week in Andalusia without hearing a bitter comparison between international and civil war. "In the World War you at least had your women and children behind you."

The Day-long Practical Joke

Blonde and lovely Miriam Hopkins, who is now filming Samuel Goldwyn's "Woman Chases Man," had a string of exciting experiences in Europe where she spent several months filming London Films' "Men Are Not Gods."

Among her adventures, Miss Hopkins lists a dinner with England's then new king, Edward the Eighth; a motor accident in France when she was hurrying to catch a boat; the loss of her passport, and a slip on a London film set which caused her to receive a painful wound when her head struck a projecting object.

But nothing that happend during her stay abroad was as funny as the little incident of the day-long practical joke in which four of the cinema colony's best known figures were involved the other day.

The "victim" was Austin Parker, noted author and playwright. The "perpetrators" were Miss Hopkins, who is the former wife of Parker, and Edmund Goulding, film director. Their "tool" was England's young Earl of Warwick, who recently has been trying to carve himself a career in pictures.

It seems that Parker had telephoned Miss Hopkins and asked that she lend him her chauffeur for a day to replace his own combination chauffeur and valet who had been hurt in a motor accident. The call was made to the actress' dressing room on the set of the Samuel Goldwyn picture "Woman Chases Man" where Goulding and the Earl chanced to be visiting.

On the spur of the moment the trio hatched the scheme of sending the Earl, in full chauffeur's rig, to Parker.

The next morning the Earl was on hand. He burned Parker's breakfast toast and eggs; he snarled at every order; he virtually wrecked the writer's apartment while "cleaning it up." While he was helping Parker to dress he "inadvertently" tripped him to the floor. Throughout the day he made the writer's life miserable and by late afternoon the Earl was, in no uncertain terms, "fired."

That evening Parker visited Miss Hopkins' home for a dinner party. And, according to witnesses, when he saw his erstwhile "chauffeur" as a guest at the table he nearly had a stroke. Then the plot was exposed and Parker himself joined in the laugh.

Soviet Situation Is Described By AnneMcCormick

By ANNE O'HARE McCORMICK

N. Y. Times

NEW YORK, June 7—Spy-hunts, arrests of traitors and purges in ever-widening circles suggest that all is not well in the Soviet Union. Nobody can pretend to know what is really happening in Russia. After twenty years of rule by the Communist party, during which the world has heard and seen more than ever before of this tremendous country, spanning two continents, it is still an unknown land. Under the Czars the Russians used to describe themselves as "a dark people," and any traveler who has crossed the central steppes and been lost in the endless aisles of the Northern forests feels the strange secretiveness of those open plains, those woods without density. It is a landscape which conceals nothing and reveals nothing. Its size alone secludes vast areas from the most enterprising sightseer, and the enveloping propaganda has the effect of a searchlight which only accentuates the obscurity beyond the narrow lanes of light.

Of all the dictators, Stalin occupies the most ambiguous position and operates most quietly and mysteriously. Mussolini has two characters. When he turns off the public drama he can be the simplest and most approachable of men, and in both roles he is impressive, and incredibly, almost brutally, frank. Hitler never loses the aura of his mission, but in private he is colorless, remote and unimpressive; he draws his power and animation from the crowd. Stalin is the same in public and private. He does not pose, parade, gesticulate or address the world. He lives a curiously hidden life, but on the rare occasions when he makes a speech or grants an interview he is equally low-pitched, even and guarded. The "Roughness" of Stalin does not appear on the surface. He is gentle, courteous, patient—and watchful. His eyes, like the Russian landscape, reveal nothing. But also they miss nothing.

What Does Stalin Fear?

Stalin is not a dictator to be stampeded. So what does that wary gaze see today as it searches the immense empire ruled from the Kremlin? To many outside observers it seemed that, since the assassination of his friend Kiroff, Stalin has been seeing scare-crows and bogies, plots and conspiracies that did not exist. There appeared something not only grotesque but phony about the wholesale trials and wholesale confessions of the old Bolsheviki, his comrades in the revolution. The imputation to the exiled Trotsky of the far-reaching counter-revolution described in those extraordinary self-condemnations touched the heights of exaggeration. It was unbelievable, for instance, that almost every member of the Soviet Government interviewed by this correspondent on a first visit to Russia, ten years ago, was a traitor, or that prophets like Bukharin and Radek, who "oriented" foreign journalists on a later visit, three years ago, were all wreckers.

And the trials of last August and last January were not the end but the beginning. Ever since, the dragnet has been hauling in fresh catches of saboteurs and plotters. The number of arrests cannot be estimated, but in May forty-four Soviet citizens were shot as spies in the Far East and twenty in Tiflis for a plot aiming at the independence of Georgia. Wreckers have been found everywhere—in the transportation system, in the key industries, in the high command of the Red Army, in the central office of the secret police, in the inner councils of the party. One well-known name after another is added to the black list. It has been deemed necessary to put political councils over the army commanders, just as during the struggle to collectivize the land the village authorities were subordinated to agents sent from Moscow. Large-scale graft has been uncovered in addition to sabotage. Writers and teachers are the latest to be purged.

in Russia, and to a lesser degree in Germany, Italy, France and other countries, a secondary engagement in the same conflict? There is at least a certain suggestiveness, and for neutrals a certain warning, in the fact that when subversive movements arise in a dictatorship, to the Communists the traitors are always "Fascists" and to the Fascists they are always "Communists."

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

Military Goosestep's Abolition Advocated By German Officer

By The Domei Tsushin Sha

BERLIN, June 5—The famous "goosestep," introduced by Frederick the Great some 200 years ago for Prussian soldiers as they parade by the reviewing stand, may be doomed if certain influences in the Nazified army have their way. Not without a struggle, however. There are ardent defenders even in the Nazi army of the time-honored leg-throwing ceremony.

Also the public seems to enjoy it thoroughly when the marching columns, whether of the army, the navy or of the air forces, suddenly on command change their regular marching step into one of stiffly throwing the foot and leg forward and upward at an angle of 90 degrees.

The first military organ to take up the cry for the abolition of the goosestep was the "Militaer-Wochenblatt." Major von Schlieben in a signed article found fault with the goosestep in so far as it was practiced by cavalrymen.

"A cavalryman's efficiency depends upon how he can handle his horse," Von Schlieben wrote. "The activity of the muscles is for the soldier on a horse quite different from that invoked when he goosesteps. In fact, the strongly developed muscles in a leg drilled for goosestepping are a hindrance for the proper handling of a horse." Besides, Von Schlieben finds, soldierly confidence is not enhanced if the cavalryman finds that he cannot do as well at goosestepping as the infantryman does. He concludes it should be abolished or at least greatly modified for the cavalry.

In a subsequent issue of the "Militaer-Wochenblatt" the editor, General Wetzell, retired, goes a step farther.

Von Schlieben's suggestion, he finds, "has the one fault that it does not draw the final and logical conclusion—the complete abolition of the goosestep.

"For the modern infantryman the goosestep is a waste of time and a ballast which he doesn't need in time of war. The time now consumed in learning it had better be spent on arms practice."

Valera Explains

tween Great Britain and Ireland I have uniformly sought to try to bring about good relations between the two peoples on the only basis on which those good relations could rest—on justice and fair play between the two countries."

Burden of Annuities

In relation to the Land Annuities, Mr. de Valera said that the only basis given by the British for their claim consisted of two agreements, made in 1923 and in 1926, and never ratified by the Dail. The annual payment represented 18.6 per cent of the Saorstat's revenue.

There can be no real national defense plan, he said, so long as Britain can occupy Irish territory. The Saorstat does not want Irish territory used as a basis of attack against Britain, and if Irish independence is completely recognized the Government would organize the people and the national resources to maintain that independence.

Press Views in Conflict

"One thing which can confidently be said of the speech delivered in the Dail yesterday by Mr. de Valera," said the Irish Press, Government newspaper, in comment, "is that it will remove all possible misapprehensions on a number of important points, that it will enable the country to understand clearly where the Government stands on all the great questions which are now before the public, and that it is bound to have an enlightening effect on British and Dominion statesmen who are stated to be greatly concerned at the vacant chair at the Imperial Conference.

"For many reasons it was necessary that the facts should be set out in such a way that everybody interested could clearly understand the position taken up by the Government. When that was done the folly and the futility of the campaign which has been conducted with a view to conveying the impression that there were really no outstanding points of difference with Great Britain and that there was no reason why the representatives of the two countries should not sit around a table to discuss questions of Imperial trade and defense will become at once obvious.

"The differences are there, and it was a patriotic duty, as well as an act of statesmanship, to set them out in terms that could not be misunderstood."

Pro-Commonwealth Opinion

On the other hand, the Irish Times, pro-Commonwealth paper, said: "President de Valera treated Dail Eireann yesterday to a long and rather rambling statement in defense of his decision to boycott the Imperial Conference. Having read it, our readers well may despair of their country's future: for it indicates that the President has learned nothing and forgotten nothing during his five years of office, and that he is just as intransigeant today as he was 15 years ago when he plunged the Irish people into civil war . . . .

"We appreciate the President's desire to secure his party's return at the general election, and, therefore, make allowances for his extravagances. On the other hand, speeches such as that of yesterday will do untold harm in Great Britain and the Dominions, where the need for appeals to anti-British passions is not understood."

Beer Publicity Stirs W.C.T.U. Counter-Attack

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, June 5—Efforts of brewers of the United States to promote a nationwide beer-selling campaign, through heavily financed propaganda invading even the church, were denounced by the Women's Christian Temperance Union at its sixteenth triennial world convention here.

Mrs. D. Leigh Colvin, national vice-president of the W. C. T. U. cited the newly formed United Brewers' Industrial Foundation, which is the spearhead of the big beer campaign, as one of the major challenges confronting organizations interested in promoting temperance. This movement, she said, making use as it does of high-powered publicity experts, constitutes one of the principal threats to sobriety to emerge since repeal.

Temperance Claim Denied

Mrs. Colvin denied assertions of brewers that beer is a temperance drink. She warned women of propaganda which already has gone so far that national broadcasting chains with a rule against liquor advertising will allow beer to be advertised on the air. She also told them that:

"There is not a state in the United States today where beer is not legally sold." And that, "in some states, brewers have attempted to dissociate beer from other liquors so people have no opportunity to even vote on the outlawry of beer since local option provisions in some states provide only for a vote on hard liquors."

Aspects of Problems

Other aspects of the liquor problem in the United States today stressed by Mrs. Colvin were:

1. Entrance of the Federal Government into the rum manufacturing business in the Virgin Islands with $2,500,000 of the taxpayers' money.
2. Rapid increase in consumption of liquor from year to year.
3. Expenditure of $35,000,000 a year by liquor interests for advertising campaigns to create new customers.
4. Increase in the national drink bill from $2,440,000,000 in the peak pre-prohibition year to $3,500,000,000 in 1935.
5. Increase in number of places liquor is sold from 177,000 before prohibition to more than 422,000 today.
6. Employment of three times as many girls as barmaids and hostesses as are being educated in the nation's colleges.
7. Failure of prisoners in penal institutions to decline with repeal.
8. Increased fatalities in automobile accidents out of proportion to the increased sale of gasoline.

Appeal to Mothers

"Today America is concerned with the problem of both men and women drinking," Mrs. Colvin declared. "Mothers of the future generation are being appealed to by liquor interests in their sales promotion and propaganda. The attempt to make drinking respectable by changing the character of the surroundings of the places where it is sold instead of decreasing the consumption is enticing those who never would have entered an old-type saloon."

Before Mrs. Colvin spoke, the convention witnessed a colorful ceremony in which representatives of the 48 states placed cut-outs of their states in a huge man frame to show distribution of 26,000 new W. C. T. U. members enrolled in honor of overseas guests. Each state at the convention is host to a foreign country. New York is host to England; Virginia to South Africa; Massachusetts to Esthonia, and so on.

A forecast by Mrs. Adah Hagler, director of the field service, that "temporary failure" of the temperance cause in the United States would in the end be turned into a "glorious victory," was heartily applauded.

Accumulation of $423,111 toward the $1,000,000 national temperance education fund which the W.C.T.U. hopes to raise by 1939, centenary of the birth of Frances E. Willard, its founder, was reported by Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, treasurer.

Emphasis the liquor interests are placing on food value, tonic effect and digestive aid of their product is making the W. C. T. U.'s alcohol educational campaign more necessary than ever, Dr. Maud Allen of Los Angeles, Calif., medical temperance director, told the convention. "The National W. C. T. U. groups are carrying on more and more effective presentations of the truth, and correcting more liquor misrepresentations than ever before," she said. W. C. T. U. work in schools in many nations was described by Miss Christine Tinling of London.

During an international program last night, Mrs. Helmi Maelo, Estonian novelist and journalist, told of arranging nearly 1000 mothers' conferences last year, attended by 200,000 persons, or almost one fifth of the country's population. Other speakers were Mrs. C. Tsune Gauntlett, president of the Women's Pan-Pacific Conference, and Mrs. M. C. McFeeters of Egypt.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

Canada Awards $14,000,000 in War Supply Contracts

OTTAWA, June 4.—Contracts for more than $14,000,000 for military, naval and air equipment have been awarded within recent weeks, Norwan Rogers, Acting Minister of National Defense for Canada, announced last night.

Details were not made public, but Rogers said about $10,000,000 of the contracts will be spent in Canada.

This action follows the expanded defense program announced in Parliament at the last session. National Defense Department main estimates for the present fiscal year jumped to $33,730,873, an increase of $14,368,434 from the previous fiscal year.

In addition, Parliament this year voted $2,201,000 for the purchase of the destroyers Fraser and St. Laurent, bought in the fiscal year ended March 31 last.

The $33,730,873 was composed of $17,850,428 for militia services, $4,486,810 for the naval service and $11,391,650 for the Royal Canadian Air Force.

"In some instances where the requirements of the department could not be supplied by Canadian manufacturers, orders have been placed in Great Britain through the office of the High Commissioner for Canada."

The largest share of the contracts is for the air force, $6,857,352, of which it is estimated $4,246,066 will be spent in this country.

Of $6,060,699 for military equipment and stores, $4,816,899 will go to Canadian industries as well $672,760 of $1,130,760 being spent for the naval services.

Mr. Rogers said it is expected contracts for the four minesweepers authorized by Parliament will be announced in the near future. In the allocation of this work, due consideration was to be given to the unemployment existing in centers where shipbuilding plants are established.

"Despite the large expenditures involved in placing the defense forces of Canada on an efficient basis," he added, "the orders for equipment have been widely distributed across the Dominion.

"In almost every instance the industry affected has received the defense equipment order as an addition to its normal production of peacetime materials. At the same time these additional orders have resulted in an important expansion of employment in many industrial centers."

Authors Of US Oppose Fascism

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK, June 5.—Half a hundred members of the writing craft from all over the United States convened at the New School for Social Research here today in their second annual congress to discuss professional problems in relation to national and international events. The week end of sessions, held under the auspices of the League of American Writers, opened with a mass meeting that packed Carnegie Hall to the rafters last night, speakers identifying the convention as designed to mobilize a literary and intellectual "popular front" against fascist tendencies.

The Carnegie Hall meeting was open to the public, and its presiding officer was Archibald Macleish, poet and editor of Fortune Magazine. The list of speakers included Ernest Hemingway, Donald Ogden Stuart, Walter Duranty and Earl Browder, secretary of the Communist Party in the United States. United States Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota, who also was to have addressed the body, was detained in Washington.

The burden of the speeches refuted the "ivory tower" conception of the writer's province in the argument that today's politics are everybody's business, and projected him as a fighter unable to ignore the challenge to democracies in present-day forces that would establish totalitarian states as the ideal government. The Spanish civil war focused this writer's role, and the finale of the program was three sequences from a motion picture on the present juncture there. Mr. Hemingway, who has just returned home from Spain, where he reported on the loyalist front for an American press syndicate, is the author of the commentary on the film.

Others signatory to the call under which the congress met were Van Wyck Brooks, Erskine Caldwell, Malcolm Cowley, Carl Van Doran, Marc Connolly, Waldo Frank, Paul de Kruif, Langston Hughes, Robert Morss Lovett, Lewis Mumford, Claude McKay, Vincent Sheehan, Upton Sinclair, Genevieve Taggard and Jean Starr Untermeyer. Its discussions will center on factual and critical analyses of the last two years in the American writing field of the novel, drama, poetry, motion picture and radio; the American writer's relations to the economic scene, and tasks and obligations facing the writer today.

The immediate objective of the congress is a national organization of American writers and arrangements for an international congress of the craft.

Soviet Production Hit By Spy Scare; '37 Schedules Lag

By HAROLD DENNY

N. Y. Times

MOSCOW, June 6—The drive against spies and saboteurs in many branches of Soviet activity from the Red Army down is attended by fear and confusion which are threatening to prevent the fulfilment of 1937 production in the most vital industries, though previously most of them met their schedules reasonably successfully.

The situation is so threatening that Pravda devoted its leading editorial to it today, ascribing the disorganization to Trotskyists taking advantage of the "wrecker hunt" to sow mistrust of honest people, so frightening business executives that they become incapable of efficient administration. There have been admissions in the official press recently that many innocent persons have been dismissed and even imprisoned.

"A state of confusion has overcome many executives and engineers," said Pravda. "Some of them in their desire to insure themselves stop making decisions and try to obtain the sanction of a higher executive or organization for any measure which it is their duty to carry out. That is the reason for the enormous mass of correspondence which is flooding the Commissariat of Heavy Industry. Executives write the Commissariat about every trifle. Executives and engineers of factories become infected with evasion of responsibility"

Industries Vitally Affected

As a result, Pravda reports, industries worked most unsatisfactorily during the first five months of this year.

"The commissariats of the heavy, light and food industries, which fulfilled their plans ahead of time for two years, cannot keep up to their programs. The output of coal and oil, steel and non-ferrous metals is lagging terribly, and the Commissariat of the Timber Industry, which has become notorious for its systematic lagging, shows no signs of improvement.

"The failure of the major branches of industry to fulfil their five months' program gives reason for alarm for the fulfilment of the whole economic program for 1937. Therefore immediate measures must be taken for remedying the defects in the work of industries."

The decline of labor discipline is given as one reason for lowered output and lack of efficiency. This, according to Pravda, is especially alarming in the coal industry, which is one of the most persistent laggards, also absolutely basic to Soviet economy.

Inequitable wage schedules are one reason. In the Chelyabinsk coal basin truckmen doing heavy and disagreeable work underground receive only 9 or 10 rubles daily, while the loaders on the surface receive 15. Miners doing excellent work frequently receive far less than miners causing much waste and many accidents.

Disclosures of plotting within the Red Army took up much press attention today. Under the heading, "We Do Not Permit the Enemies of the People to Live," the Red Army's organ Krasnaya Zvezda said:

"Events show that the enemy has succeeded in penetrating into the midst of our army. The accursed enemy of the people, the Trotskyist dreg Gamarnik [Marshal I. B. Gamarnik, assistant commissar of defense, who committed suicide May 31] using the most atrocious methods to disguise his double dealing for a long time carried on the black counter-revolutionary activity of a spy and Fascist bandit."

It was recalled today that Marshal Gamarnik shortly before he committed suicide was elected a member of the Moscow party committee.

The resolution of the Communist party congress in the Ukraine, published here today, asserts that disloyal elements, including Ukrainian Nationalists, took advantage of the "political blindness" of Paul Postisheff, deposed Ukrainian Communist leader, and got into many responsible government positions and even penerated into the administration of the Central Party Committee of the Ukraine. Postisheff, who not long ago was considered one of Joseph Stalin's most promising lieutenants, recently was demoted to an unimportant post in the Volga.

Recruiting Plan

accepted to fill vacancies that may have occurred at the existing centers we run for the training of young men from areas of unemployment.

"The numbers admitted for training in any particular trade will be regulated," the Ministry of Labor official continued, "in the normal way, by the estimated power of absorption of the trade at that time.

"During training at the centers the ex-soldiers will receive jobless pay and other allowances given to men who come to government centers through more usual channels.

Butter For Margarine

Butter is also to take the place of margarine on the table. Instead of an ounce of margarine the soldier is to have an ounce of butter, and half an ounce of margarine as well.

The cash allowance for messing abroad is to be increased, stoppages of pay for such items as pith helmets and general kit are to be abolished and soldiers are to get all the kit they require free, and civilians are to be co-opted to do "un-soldierly" jobs, which is taken here to mean such tasks as floor-scrubbing. An extra £40,000 a year is to be provided for the purpose of paying civilians to do unmilitary work.

Barracks are being made more comfortable. Sitting rooms are now provided with radios. Hot and cold water are laid on to every floor and central heating installed throughout.

To assist the War Office in "telling the world" of these improvements a firm of professional publicists has been hired to deal with publicity.

Winston Churchill

royal lips.

Yet here was a man who felt very much like the bulk of his father's subjects upon all kinds of questions. He saw things being done by governments which he regarded as foolish or wrong, saw things being neglected by governments which he regarded as calling for immediate treatment. Can anyone measure the self-restraint and discriminating intelligence which enabled him in all these eighteen years of constant public utterance never to put a foot wrong, never to cause an incident and scarcely ever the smallest criticism.

But Mr. Bolitho, while giving us some account of this, is quick to note the darker side of the picture. Sometimes in his travels when the Prince attended balls, he was guilty of dancing too much with some pretty girl whom he met for the first time and admired, and of dancing too little with the elderly official hostess. All this is faithfully set forth by the author as befits one who is no courtier. It may well be true. After the blare and glare of the long day was done, after the crowds had dispersed and the last salute of cannon had reverberated into silence, after the ceaseless hustle and bustle had been gone through, it cannot be denied that from time to time the Prince seemed to want to indulge his own wishes for a change. From this also we can see why it was he threw himself with such an exceptional and excessive ardor into riding to hounds, steeplechasing and athletic exercise of all kinds, and finally aviation.

In the main, and with much consistency, this story of the life of this brilliant, gifted, charming and warm-hearted prince represents him as being below the average of mankind. We are given a picture, alleged to be intimate, claiming to be drawn by a friend and admirer, of a character vitiated by grave defects of temperament and conduct, at which the wise, the good, the healthy and, above all, the average British man and woman would frown or blush. A whole series of excuses and explanations are offered for him by his disillusioned defender. All is done in the guise of sorrowng friendship. This heightens the effect of the general depreciation. An atmosphere of insulting pity is made to pervade the story and thus prepare the reader for the final chapters which the author found so horrible to write, but which he nevertheless wrote unflinchingly.

No Constitutional Issue

By the time King Edward ascended the throne our author, without excising the long account of his many public services and successes, has contrived to draw a picture of a delinquent on whom long-delayed but inevitable retribution is about to fall. "Royal persons usually live in strange isolation from the rest of the world. . . This isolation from the broad stretches of society sometimes confuses the judgment of princes, and they often imagine qualities into persons who break down the barriers of reserve by affecting familiarity. These are usually second-rate flatters . . . . For some sad reason the Prince of Wales was not equipped with this power to judge, and early in his life he was inclined to gather about him those people whose familiar manner made it easy to talk with them, rather than those whose loyalty and respect made their manner seem reserved. . . . He did not seem to know the 'half-way house between jest and earnest,' and when his official duties were ended he often sought his pleasure in society which was unsuited to the needs of the heir to the throne."

His grandfather was never accused of being casual over his duties. His grandson seemed unable to uphold this wise division in his life, perhaps because of the hustled state in which he lived and perhaps because of some sad fault in his judgment. While he traveled over the face of the world on waves of compliment and praise; while the English newspapers coined fine names for him and increased the record of his dutifulness and his chivalry, there was a growing undercurrent of discontent. It lert a shadow wherever he went."

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

The Ghost Ship

Last July the little sailing ship "Tern," owned by the Hownam-Meeks of Castle Cove, Weymouth, England, left the harbor with the owner's son and two friends aboard. Late the same day the Tern returned to her moorings under full sail, but without a soul on Board. To the parents, the boat seemed to bring a message of trouble, if not disaster. They set out in search of the boys and found them marooned on a tiny rock in Portland Harbor. "We were having tea on the rock when we noticed the Tern had slipped her moorings and was drifting away, and we swam after her until we saw she was making for home," said the boys very calmly.

A Strange Hermit

Henry Welby (1552-1636) a wealthy and much traveled landowner of Lincolnshire, sentenced himself to solitary confinement for life, and spent 44 years in a self-imposed prison without showing his face to anyone, not even to members of his family. The reason for this strange self-sentence was his profligate brother, who had tried to slay him with a pistol. In chagrin over this unbrotherly act, Welby withdrew from the world and spent 44 years locked up, unseen by any living creature, and abstaining all the while from fish, flesh and wine.

Unnecessary

It was a very small station in the Highlands, and to the solitary railway official in view the English woman visitor was calling: "Portah, portah, come here at once!"

"What d'ye want?" that worthy asked.

"I've lost my luggage," she called.

"Then," came the retort, "for what was ye be wanting a porter?"—Tit-Bits.

Schuschnigg Once

ers of the Catholic youth organization of the Tyrol. This in turn brought him into contact with Monsignor Seipel, then at the outset of his long, carefully planned and invisibly but obstinately pursued campaign for the overthrow of the democratic republic.

Schuschnigg's political career began with his election to Parliament as a Clerical Deputy in 1927. Soon afterward Seipel made him rapporteur in legal and budgetary matters and his first blow at democracy and the republic was struck in his rapport on the Constitution of 1929, a compromise which the Socialists were driven resentfully to accept—the maximum of reaction toward the old order which was obtainable by parliamentary methods. Even this was forced through under threats of armed revolt by the Heimwehr Fascists. In 1932, in the second Cabinet of the late Dr. Buresch, the 34-year-old Schuschnigg became Minister of Justice, an office which he has held ever since. It became a key position in the counter-revolutionary period which reached its crest in February, 1934, when Dr. Dollfuss smashed the Socialist party in Vienna and the rest of the country.

It was the Ministry of Justice which drafted the preliminary measures for bleeding the Socialist power white until the moment came to strike. This Ministry supervised the subsequent counter-revolutionary activities of the courts. It was directly concerned with the subsequent hangings and imprisonments. It had to devise and run concentration camps. Dr. Schuschnigg himself played the leading role in drawing up the new concordat, in abolishing divorce and otherwise making the Austrian marriage law synonymous with canonical law. Now financial enactments providing for the confiscation of the property of enemies of the clerico-fascist regime, laws restraining the liberty of press, restoring the death penalty (abolished by the republic), special laws for the regime of courts-martial, special laws against the Nazis, pre-counter-revolutionary laws against the possession of arms and explosives; and finally the preparation of Dr. Dollfuss' dictated counter-revolutionary Constitution of May, 1934—all these were among the gigantic tasks which the Minister of Justice had to master.

"The new Constitution," said Dr. Schuschnigg in his brilliant commentary on what (under Dollfuss) was mainly his own work, "deliberately turns its back on formal democratic principles and on the principle of universal, equal and direct suffrage. It deliberately introduces the corporative system as the basis of the new State. It lays special weight on an independent and powerful leadership, hence the emergency powers and the right to change law by decree."

From May of 1933 he was Minister of Education also, and here he set himself the task of eradicating liberalism, socialism and free thought, and putting the priest in supreme control of the minds of youth. The theater, the film, literature were enrolled in the service of "political Catholicism."

In 1933 Dr. Schuschnigg founded the Ostmarkische Sturmscharen (Storm Troops of the Eastern Marches). They incorporated the two strongest characteristics of Schuschnigg—his romantic German Nationalism which sees Austria as the "Eastern March," the outpost against the Slavs and other lesser breeds, and his fervent Catholicism, which made him select as their badge the old catacomb hieroglyphic for Christ, chi-ro.

Despite his talents and intense industry, Schuschnigg was little known abroad when his great hour came. Cool, efficient, precise, he never captured the imagination of the clerico-fascist supporters as did little Dollfuss with his vivacity, his hot temper and lack of self-control, his ever-friendly smile and irresistible personal charm. On the fateful July 25, 1934, when Dollfuss was assassinated by the Nazis, the Vice Chancellor, Prince Starhemberg, as so often at critical moments, was basking in the sun of the Lido; Schuschnigg, in Vienna and free outside instead of imprisoned inside the chancellery, had to take command.

He rose to the occasion, took responsibility for the negotiations with the rebels, for the subsequent disregarding of the safe conduct guaranteed to them, and for the hanging of thirteen and imprisonment of the remainder. He organized military resistance throughout the country, overthrew the revolt, formed the new Cabinet (instead of Vice Chancellor Starhemberg) and a fortnight later successfully defied a threat of revolt by Major Fey and his Vienna Heimwehr.

There began the long rivalry behind the scenes between the canny Schuschnigg and his "temperamantvoller" Vice Chancellor, who expected—as did the world—that Schuschnigg would merely keep the Chancellorship warm until the Duce authorized him, Prince Starhemberg, to occupy it. But while the princely hare alternately sprifited and slept, the bourgeois tortoise moved steadily on toward the goal. When Prince Starhemberg accepted tamely his dismissal from the Cabinet in May, 1936, and was leaving with a football team for Rome, he looked as dazed as a man who has suddenly been flung down a marble staircase! And well he might, for it was from a gay party in the Cobenzl Bar that the Prince was summoned to an unexpected Cabinet council to learn that he, the indispensable, had been dispensed with.

The Duce had been convinced that Schuschnigg was the better man and wanted the erratic Prince out of the way as a preliminary to getting Schuschnigg to conclude the Austro-German agreement of July 11. This agreement the German Nationalist Schuschnigg concluded with satisfaction; the Catholic Schuschnigg, the enemy of his church's enemies, with deep misgivings. But the interests of the dawning "Fascist International" of Italy and Germany demanded the step and Austria could not oppose her Italian protector's wishes.

Starhemberg, for his part, counted on an early return and an easy triumph. Schuschnigg, he told his friends, was weary of office, exhausted and broken by the terrible personal tragedy of the motor accident of July, 1935, when his beloved wife, Herma, was killed at his side. Mussolini, boasted Starhemberg, had intimated that the Heimwehr were his watchdogs in Austria lest Schuschnigg went too far with Germany. Within five months followed the second coup, accepted by Starhemberg as tamely as the first. Again, after months of silent, unobserved preparation, Schuschnigg called a midnight Cabinet council and deprived the Prince of his once-redoubtable Heimwehr, who were quietly disarmed.

After hewing down such giants of the Fascist forest as Starhemberg and Fey, it was little more than a mechanical repetition of a skilled woodsman's stroke to fell Minister of Security Baron Neustadter-Sturmer last March, when he began to play the Nazi's game a little too obviously from within the Cabinet. Baron Neustadter had flattered himself that he could not be touched without the Minister of Interior, General Glaise von Horstenau, appointed under the Austro-German agreement, falling with him and thus the whole agreement being placed in jeopardy. But he went overnight when Woodsman Schuschnigg decided he was ripe for the axe, and in twenty-four hours was forgotten.

Usual Symptoms Of Syphilis Told

By MORRIS FISHBEIN, M. D.
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association

NEW YORK, June 11.—There are some records of syphilis infection by accident when a person with a sore on his finger has come in contact with syphilitic material on the body of another person.

There are records of infection from kissing, and babies have been infected from wet nurses. These secondary types of infection are, however, so unusual in comparison with the ordinary methods of spread of infection that this fact should not frighten any one into a constant fear of the disease.

In the vast majority of cases syphilis is transmitted from one human to another during sex relationship.

Hotel beds, public lavatories, bath tubs, door knobs, books, dishes used in restaurants, and similar materials are not easily infected. It is necessary for the germ to get into the body through a sore or through an easily infected spot if it is to invade the body generally.

Usual Symptoms

As has already been said, the organism that causes syphilis is killed by drying and is susceptible to soap and water. Thorough washing is an important factor in preventing the spread of the infection.

The first sign of the disease usually is a sore at the point where the germ has entered the tissue. The doctor who finds this sore will make his diagnosis by studying the material from the sore under the microscope, either fresh or after staining.

He also takes some blood from the veins and tests this blood with what is known as the Wassermann test or by the Kahn test. These tests determine usually at a fairly early stage whether or not a person has been infected with syphilis.

If the disease is not promptly treated it will spread to the interior of the body, ultimately causing eruption on the skin, and all of the other serious conditions that have been mentioned.

May Be Other Causes

There are a few simple facts that every one ought to know about syphilis:

This disease does not cause pimples.

It does not cause itching conditions of the skin.

It may cause ulcers of the legs, but more frequently these are due to varicose veins.

It may be responsible for failure to produce children, but there are also other conditions which may produce such failures.

It is not a form of blood poisoning. Testing of the blood will show whether or not the patient has syphilis.

It is not responsible for the vast majority of cases of baldness, but some cases of loss of hair not only of the head but of the entire body may be due to syphilis.

It has not been established in any way that syphilis is the cause of cancer or that these two conditions are in any way related.

Basic Rules

There are a few simple instructions which were widely circulated during the World War to all soldiers who were found to be infected with this disease:

If you have any sore on your genitals, no matter how small, or if you think you have syphilis, consult your physician.

Do not under any conditions rely on the "blood medicines" that promise to eradicate syphilis, and do not be caught by advertising doctors—quacks—who try to get your money by promising to cure you quickly.

Do not let druggists prescribe for you; they are not qualified to treat syphilis.

Do not hesitate to tell your doctor or dentist of your disease. Later in life if you get sick at any time, you should tell your doctor that you have had syphilis, since this fact may furnish a clew to treatment on which your cure depends.

Live temperately and sensibly. Do not go to extreme in any direction in your habits of life.

Try to get a reasonable amount of sleep—eight hours is the amount needed by the average person. And as a safeguard to others, sleep alone.

Take good care of your teeth. Brush them two or three times a day. If they are not in good condition, have them attended to by a dentist. But when you go to him tell him that you have syphilis.

Don't Spread Trouble

Do not have sexual intercourse until you are told by your physician that you are no longer contagious. It will interfere with the cure of the disease, and it is criminal, for it is likely to give the disease to your wife.

You must not marry until you have the doctor's consent, which cannot be properly given until at least two years have passed after cure seems complete. If you do you run the risk of infecting your wife and your children with syphilis.

Early in the course of syphilis, while it is contagious, the greatest danger of infecting other people is by the mouth. Because of this danger, do not kiss anybody. Particularly, do not endanger children by kissing them.

Do not allow anything that has come in contact with your lips or that has been in your mouth to be left around so that anybody can use it before it has been cleaned. This applies to cups, glasses, knives, forks, spoons, pipes, cigars, toothpicks, and all such things. It is better to use your own towels, brushes, combs, razor, soap, etc., though these are much less likely to be contaminated than objects that go in your mouth.

If you have any open sores—you will not have any after the first week or two, if you are treated—everything that comes in contact with them should be destroyed or disinfected.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"---by Ripley

The Man in the Moon Is Upside Down in Argentina

The Heavenly show changes below the equator. Folks down in the Southern Hemisphere have a private showing of the pageant of the stars. In Argentina, for instance, they cannot see the North Star or the Great Dipper, but they have the Southern Cross.

And the Man in the Moon is upside down!

The moon's rotation on its own axis coincides with its revolution around the earth, so that our view of the earth's satellite is limited to a single lunar hemisphere. We are all familiar with the lunar resemblance to a human face (Man in the Moon) when viewed with the naked eye. Now it comes as a distinct shock to learn that our view of the moon is not independent of earthly geographical location. To each inhabitant of our globe, with varying georgraphical position of the observer, the aspect of the lunar disc varies until, south of the Tropic of Capricorn, the "Man in the Moon" appears suspended upside down. The irregularly spotted surface of the moon is to an observer in the Argentine the exact reverse of the aspect with which we are familiar in the Northern Hemisphere. The same principle holds for the moon's phases.

Liberians Threatening To Impeach President

MONROVIA, Liberia, June 5—Liberia's political circles are excited over agitation against the administration of President Edwin Barclay, elected in 1936 to an eight-year term.

A mass meeting was called at Bensonville recently to demand his impeachment. The President was accused of having gone against the interests of the people in sponsoring a tax bill that would require every man to pay $1 an acre on all land he did not develop and require all natives to double their hut tax.

Citizens contended the tax would so impoverish the country that nobody could afford to own land.

Why So Pale?

When the wife of the Sultan of Selangor visited England with her husband recently, she learned only two words of English: "Be Careful!" and she addressed them to her chauffeur every time she went out. She and the Sultan thought at first that it must be fright at the terrible traffic which made English girls so pale.

J.A.A. EXCURSION

The Japan Automobile Association has planned an excursion to Izurusan and Oohirayama in Tochigi-ken, which will be held Sunday July 11 starting at 8 a.m. The party will visit the Senjuin Mangan Temple, a Kannon Temple of the Shingon Sect famous for its architecture and generally known as a miniature of Nikko Temple. In this temple a masterpiece of Hidari Jingoro, famous sculptor of some generations ago is preserved. The temple is located in the village of Izuru only five minutes walk from the parking place for the cars.

Oohirayama is a hill 343 meters above sea level and is situated on the south-western side of Tochigi city. It commands a view of the whole Kanto plain.

Participants in this excursion can bring their own lunch, or if they do not wish to, a vegetarian lunch can be obtained at the temple, or Japanese food can be bought at a rest house at Oohirayama.

If the weather on Sunday is bad the trip, which covers 136 miles will be postponed till Sunday July 18.

The World's Revolving

That price would be just a little less than what is current in the other world centers.

But to come back to our starting point. If there is no night life for Occidentals in Tokyo, it is because —aside from the fun of going out to a night club for a lark now and then—it really is not wanted by a sufficient number of people to make it pay.

PureSulphurWon FromWasteGases By Tyne Process

Christian Science Monitor

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, Eng.—An inexpensive process has been evolved which permits the extraction of pure sulphur from the harmful waste gases normally discharged into the air by smelter furnaces, following research undertaken independently by Imperial Chemical Industries in England and the well-known Swedish firm of Bolidens Gruvaktiebolag.

This discovery formed the subject of a lecture given by Mr. M. P. Appelbey, research manager at the Billingham works of Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd., to the Newcastle section of the Society of Chemical Industry recently.

Some 2,000,0000 tons of sulphur is discharged into the atmosphere by smelter furnaces every year throughout the world, Mr. Appelbey said, and in 1929 nearly as much sulphur was lost in this manner as was produced in the Texan and Sicilian mines.

Pooling of Research

Last year, after pursuing investigations into the problem along separate lines, Imperial Chemical Industries and Bolidens Gruvaktiebolag pooled the results of their research, and it is pointed out that the story of how I. C. I. developed the process provides an interesting example of physico-chemical research.

In its first stage alone it can be used to give concentrated sulphur dioxide, which has a ready sale in liquid form, and sulphur dioxide can be extracted from almost all waste smelter gases, however low their sulphur dioxide content. The gas can then be treated to produce pure sulphur if required.

Dioxide Content Reduced

For example, the process will also reduce the sulphur dioxide content of the flue gases of power stations.

At Billingham, an experimental plant has been in intermittent operation for several years and now gives continuous production of 20 tons of sulphur dioxide gas per day. This gas is treated in a plant claiming a daily output of five to six tons of high-quality sulphur.

The new process, Mr. Appelbey said, may yet be applied to the extraction of sulphur from coal. It is held that if only a quarter of the sulphur from this course were saved a quantity exceeding the world's output of native sulphur would become available.

American Experiments

Similar work is being accomplished in America with waste flue gases. J. Wellford Martin and D. H. Killeffer, New York chemical engineers, described a process at meetings of the American Chemical Society in Chapel Hill, North Carolina, recently, whereby every smoking factory could be considered a potential source of "dry ice." They had devised a new method of extracting carbon dioxide from factory smoke.

Two years ago Dr. C. A. Jascobson of West Virginia University described before the same body a method of obtaining chemicals useful as a catalytic in soap making. Meanwhile other experiments are being tried wherever the smoke nuisance is at its worst, in the attempt to persuade factories and power houses that it is not only a kind thing to do—lessening the smoke nuisance—but a very profitable act as well.

Zetland Explains Speech On India

London Times

LONDON, June 13.—Speaking at Oxford to the University Conservative Association last night, Lord Zetland, Secretary of State for India, said that he had seen it suggested in India that the interpretation of the Constitutional position which he had given in the House of Lords on June 8 amounted to a rejection of a peace offer on the part of Mr. Gandhi. It was certainly never so intended and he was at a loss to understand how any such meaning could be read into it.

All that he had said, Lord Zetland explained, was that in the event of a serious disagreement between the Governor and his Ministers, which he hoped would seldom occur, it would be better that both parties should be free to consider what action they should take rather than that the Governor should be bound by an undertaking previously given summarily to dismiss his ministers or to ask for their resignation, irrespective of the nature or magnitude of the particular disagreement.

There seemed to be two widely differing conceptions of the nature of a Provincial Government under the Act; one was based on the assumption that the functions of the Governor were solely those of a watchdog concerned only to seize every possible opportunity of thwarting the Ministers in their task, the other on the assumption that the Governor and Ministers were partners in a common task, the initiative and indeed, except in a limited and clearly defined sphere, the control, being vested in the Ministers. In the sphere of the special responsibilities the Governor would not only desire but would have the right to require that possible grounds of disagreement should be frankly discussed between his Ministers and himself. Under the first conception the Governor necessarily appeared as an aloof and hostile figure; under the second as a friend and collaborator. It was the second of these two conceptions that he had always cherished and that he was certain was the true one.

Need For Reciprocity

He had also seen it said that what Congress spokesmen sought was a proof of friendliness between the British authorities and their party. He would remind them that just as it takes two to make a quarrel, so friendship is only possible on a reciprocal basis. So far as he knew the declaration made in the name of the Congress at Faizpur that their purpose in sending Congressmen to the new legislatures would be "not to cooperate in any way with the Act but to combat it and seek an end of it" had never been withdrawn. On the other hand, by way of contrast, Congress had been invited in every Province in which they were in a majority in the legislatures to form Ministries and had been assured by the Governors of the most cordial cooperation.

That offer and that cooperation were still at the disposal of those who were willing to accept office under the Act with the desire not to wreck the Constitution but to obtain the best from it. He did not know what further proof of friendliness it was possible to give.

Lord Zetland defended the Government's action on the North-West Frontier, where it had been found necessary to use large numbers of troops to bring peace.

"We have been criticized for our methods of fighting and we have been accused in a certain Italian paper of using poison gas," he said. "But there is no foundation for such an accusation."

Gold And Monetary

currency price of gold would set in motion influences of a virulently deflationary character.

We must, in other words, beware of the facile and oversimplified version of the gold problem which interprets it wholly in terms of an outmoded Quantity Theory of money. The factors making for inflation in the world of today are to be found rather in the deliberate unbalancing of budgets and in the race in armaments than in the abundance of gold production. Admittedly the increasing output of gold is a problem which deserves the closest attention of the financial authorities of the world. But if we admit that gold has a part to play in any international system of currency as the ultimate method of settling the uncleared balances of payments—and for this role no serious alternative has yet been suggested—then more will be lost than gained by tampering too readily with the relation between that basic standard of values and currencies themselves. It would be much better to concentrate on the control of the trade cycle and incidentally of the price level by refining the mechanism of control which is now being applied and which consists in achieving some balance between savings and investment and between the production of capital and consumption goods. This will yield far better results than a return to the "elastic parity" ideas which are the product of oversimplified forms of the Quantity Theory and which have been found definitely wanting when applied as they were during the early Roosevelt period. Recovery in the United States and in the world at large took place despite rather than because of the "rubber dollar." There is no real reason why the nightmare of such elasticity should return to the world of commerce and finance today.

As for the problem of excessive gold production, it can obviously not be discussed with the assurance adopted by theoretical exponents such as Professor Cassel until we know much more than can at present be known about such vital factors as the likelihood of a revival of international trade and lending (which would lead to a redistribution of existing gold stocks) and the level to which social and labor developments in countries such as the United States and France are likely to carry wages and industrial costs. Meanwhile, if we are suffering from an apparent excess of gold in this country, there is no lack of means whereby this situation could be mitigated. Mr. Keynes, in an admirable letter to The Times, suggests some of the more obvious of these means. The first would be a raising of the existing embargo on foreign loans. "It would," in the words of Mr. Keynes, "be crack-brained to complain of a surfeit of gold and at the same time try to increase it by maintaining an embargo which dates from the period when we had a deficiency." Another way would be to ask the members of the sterling area to keep their reserves, not in the form of sterling assets as at present, but in the form of gold earmarked in London for their account. Since many of the countries concerned are gold producers, they could offer no objection to such a method of alleviating any redundancy in our own gold reserves. Mr. Keynes is, however, suspicious of the sincerity of much of the talk of a gold "glut." The gold scare has thrived on obscurantism. The observer cannot judge clearly of the issues at stake, in this country at least, because it is not known how much gold we have and what is the extent of our short-term commitments abroad against which this reserve must be set. If, says Mr. Keynes, the Chancellor places the essential facts about the gold position before the House and the country, "he will find that suspicions will be dispelled and that for the first time for years the Chancellor of the Exchequer will have the benefit of well-informed comment." This is a view which today especially will find widespread sympathy in the City.

Faster Than A Machine Gun

In speed, precision and efficiency, few machines of the world can exceed the modern newspaper printing press. An electric button is pressed, the huge cumbersome-looking machine jumps into action and within a few seconds complete newspapers come flipping out of the rollers at a speed which keeps two or three men busy lifting them off in bunches from the conveyors. At full speed a modern newspaper press prints, cuts and folds complete 60,000 newspapers in one hour—1000 a minute—or more than 16 per second. This is almost twice as fast as the firing of a machine gun, which is popularly considered the ultimate in machine speed.

A Monument To The Living

Standing in one of the centrally located park areas of Birmingham, is a life-size marble statue of the Rev. James A. Bryan, active pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church. The statue was chiseled by a Birmingham sculptor, George Bridges, as a part of the local Federal Art Project, and presented to the City of Birmingham. "Brother" Bryan's work among the unfortunate and underprivileged classes has attracted wide attention, and his statue was given its place in the Five Points Circle by tacit public consent, as a mark of esteem and in recognition of more than 40 years of service to the people.

Blush Control

A beauty specialist in Paris is teaching his customers the gentle art of blushing. So many women have complained that when they are perfectly made up, if they blush it isn't visible.

A blush, it seems, may either be silent or maintained during conversation. For the silent blush, a woman is advised to hold her breath, while mentally counting to 55. But if she wishes to talk and blush at the same time, she must play with a string of beads about her neck until she has brought it fairly tight, and then insert one finger between the beads and her carotid artery. This interferes with the flow of blood to the head and induces a natural-looking blush, which has the additional advantage of being under such perfect control that it can be switched on and off as required.—N. Social and Personal Notes

JOHN T. UNDERWOOD DIES IN BROOKLYN

Word has been received by Mr. H. H. Underwood, President of the Chosen Christian College in Seoul, Korea, of the death of his uncle Mr. John T. Underwood, president of the Underwood Elliott Fisher Company, at his home in Brooklyn, New York, July 2. Mr. Underwood was an earnest Christian from his early youth and a great supporter of the Board of Foreign Missionaries. He gave the salaries for five or six missionaries on the field in addition to supporting his brother who is engaged in this work. Mr. Underwood is known to have given $400,000 to the Chosen Christian College and in addition to this has given freely for the salaries of missionaries in Seoul. Apart from donations to the Chosen Christian College he gave much to other institutions. His gifts in Korea alone are estimated at over one million dollars, and Mr. Underwood's benefactions were not limited to Korea. He also gave to the works of missions in China, India and many other fields. It is estimated that he also gave several hundred thousand dollars to home missionary work among the Kentucky mountaineers.

Mr. Underwood suffered a rather serious illness about seven years and though he recovered from this he had another attack about four years ago and since that time has never been in really good health.

Mr. Underwood is survived by his wife, his married daughter, Mrs. Darwin R. J. James III, four granddaughters and his nephew, Mr. H. H. Underwood.

No details as to the immediate cause of Mr. Underwood's death have as yet been received in Seoul.

TO LEAVE JAPAN

Professor Klaus Pringsheim, who has been the musical director of The Tokyo Academy of Music for the past six years, will leave the Academy after his contract expires at the end of the current spring term. The Academy is giving a farewell concert Thursday, July 8, at 8 p.m., at the Nihon Seinenkan. The program, which consists of Beethoven's Ninth ("Choral") Symphony, will be participated in by all members of the Academy's orchestra and chorus and will be the last one to be given under Mr. Pringsheim's direction. After the concert, a farewell function will be held at the banquet hall of the Nihon Seinenkan, for which the Academy has issued invitations to many prominent musicians of Tokyo.

During the six years of his activity at The Tokyo Academy of Music, Mr. Pringsheim has been serving as conductor of the Academy's chorus and orchestra, as professor of musical composition and of orchestra direction, and as trainer of the Imperial Navy Orchestra, the members of which receive their musical education at the Academy. Professor Pringsheim expects to spend the summer in a Japanese sea resort and to leave this country early next autumn when he will go on an extended concert and musical lecture tour to the United States and Europe.
